

Hoffa Called Before Senate Investigators On Racket Infiltration

Washington - (UPI) - Teamster President James R. Hoffa was summoned before Senate investigators today to answer charges that he allowed racketeers to infiltrate his union despite a promise to clean up the giant labor organization.

Hoffa Quoted

The Senate investigations subcommittee particularly wanted to question Hoffa about alleged payoffs to racketeers by Local 239 and other teamster locals in New York City.

The investigators also wanted to find out more about a recording in which the Teamster officials allegedly quoted Hoffa as directing Corallo: "I don't care if you want to steal, if you want to rob, go ahead... but don't get caught, don't get caught."

Before the much-investigated Hoffa takes the stand, the subcommittee called Martin F. O'Donoghue, former chairman of the board of monitors who was expected to present evidence of alleged new Teamster corruption.

Speaker Sam Rayburn was expected to tell him the outcome still is in doubt in the fight to enlarge the House Rules Committee in order to break the conservative coalition which dominates the panel and threatens Kennedy's legislative program. House will vote Thursday on Rayburn's plan to add three new members to the committee. House Republicans came out against the plan Monday.

Nominations: The Senate Foreign Relations Committee called for questioning - and then was expected to quickly approve - three more top members of President Kennedy's State department team: George W. Ball, named undersecretary of state for economic affairs; former Michigan Gov. G. Mennen Williams, appointed assistant secretary for African affairs and Roger W. Jones, selected for deputy undersecretary.

Peace Agency: Twenty-three Democratic congressmen introduced legislation to create a national peace agency. The agency would study scientific approaches to disarmament controls and political and economic tensions that lead to war. It also would train enforcement teams which would police atomic test bans and controls on poison gas, germ warfare and other weapons.

Oregon Native Named by Udall As BLM Director

Washington - (UPI) - Interior Secretary Stewart L. Udall today appointed Karl S. Landstrom, a career conservationist, to be director of the bureau of land management.

Udall said Landstrom's appointment would be effective Feb. 1.

Landstrom, 51, is a native of Lebanon, Ore., who now lives in Arlington, Va. He had been serving on the staff of the House Interior Committee after a career in government conservation agencies which began when he joined the Agriculture Department in 1937.

Succeeds Woosley

The agency is custodian of 477 million acres of federally owned "public domain" lands.

Landstrom succeeds Edward Woosley of Malad, Idaho, as head of the bureau.

Udall also chose W. W. (Bill) Keeler, an Oklahoma oil executive and Cherokee leader, as his chief adviser on Indian affairs for three months.

Condon Lectures Slated in Oregon

Eugene - A chemist whose honors and awards include an honorary doctor of science degree from Oxford university, England, and lectureship invitations in England, Scotland, Italy, and Israel, as well as by most of the leading universities and colleges of this country, will give the 1961 Condon Lectures in Oregon.

The chemist is Dr. Melvin Calvin, director of the biorganic chemistry group in the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory and professor of chemistry in the University of California.

Dr. Calvin will give the first of the Condon series on the University of Oregon campus Feb. 7 and 9. These talks will concern the "Chemical Evolution and Origin of Life on the Earth and Elsewhere."

The lecturer will repeat the two talks in Corvallis Feb. 14 and 16, and in Portland Feb. 21 and 23.

The Condon Lectures are under the sponsorship of the Oregon State System of Higher Education. Established to inform the public of important current research, the annual series includes two lectures given at the University of Oregon, and repeated at Oregon State college, and in Portland.

Legislative Briefs

Salem - (UPI) - Sen. Walter Pearson (D-Portland) said today refusal of members of the State Public Welfare Commission to resign at request of Gov. Mark Hatfield "again demonstrates the need for government reorganization."

Pearson said "this is another example of how defiant members of commissions can become of the governor and the legislature." Hatfield Monday publicly called for resignations of four commission members.

Salem - (UPI) - Rep. Grace Peck (D-Portland) said Monday she resented Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) taking a "political dig" at Gov. Mark Hatfield over Oregon being one of eight states not taking full part in the federal surplus food program. She said "no one is to blame."

She said she also was disappointed when Hatfield "passed the buck" to the State Welfare Commission and urged all sides to take politics "out of the food program."

Her statement was timed with one by Coos County Judge James Harrison who said Oregon counties have not been enthusiastic about the surplus food program because of high administrative costs.

Salem - (UPI) - Heavy trucks, such as log trucks, may be responsible for as much as half the cost of keeping up highways, State Highway Commission Chairman Milo Melver told the Senate Highways Committee Monday.

He spoke on a bill that would reduce weight-mileage vehicle fees on loads over 44,000 pounds.

If the bill were passed, much of the saving would be returned to log truckers.

Log truckers last week protested fees based on weight and distance, instead of the present flat fee. They said a charge based on weight would break many small log hauling operators.

Salem - (UPI) - A Ways and Means subcommittee Monday approved a $58,200 budget for the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry, considerably more than the $36,750 recommended by the governor, but still about $1,800 short of the museum's request.

The same subcommittee okayed $122,000 for the Oregon Historical Society, $99,800 below the society's request.

Salem - (UPI) - Republican legislators and Gov. Mark Hatfield had an informal discussion of legislative issues over breakfast this morning.

The event started a series of weekly breakfasts which Hatfield will hold with Republican lawmakers during the course of the session.

Discussion included questions and answers on Hatfield's government reorganization plan, with the governor attempting to erase some doubts about the plans on the part of some GOP legislators.

Salem - (UPI) - Rep. Cornelius Bateson (D-Salem) has announced he will introduce a bill this week to prohibit unfair marketing practices in agriculture.

A farmer, Bateson said the bill would "provide protection for the economic underdog" in agricultural marketing. He said there have been unfair marketing practices in Oregon in the past.

Practices banned by the bill would include blacklisting and the formation of certain types of company associations.

Portland - (UPI) - Oregon Democratic Chairman Robert Straub Monday called for speedy enactment of federal aid to education to alleviate state and local tax burdens he said have "reached the critical stage in Oregon."

The Eugene senator called educational needs one of the foremost challenges facing government in Oregon.

Straub said school outlays were expected to double in the next decade and the federal government with its superior taxing resources must shoulder a larger share of the cost.

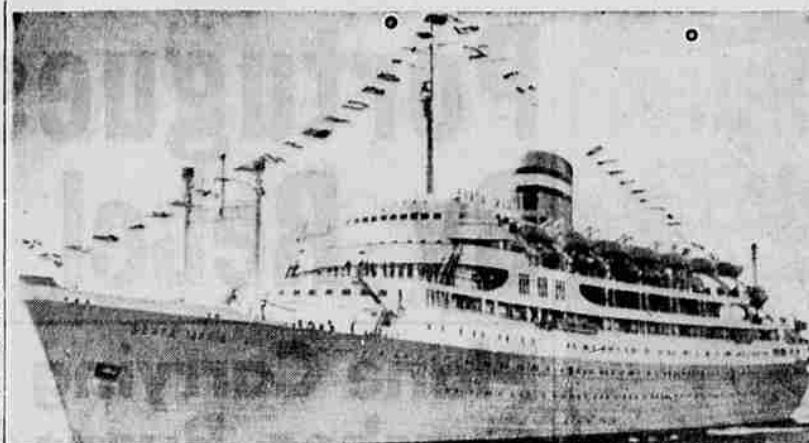

Book on Oregon Schools Compiled

Eugene - A reference book with a compilation of the name and dates-of-founding and other pertinent data of every school in Oregon from 1834 to 1958 has been published by the University of Oregon.

The book, compiled and edited by Clifford L. Constance, University of Oregon registrar, is "Chronology of Oregon Schools 1834-1958."

Starting with the year 1834, the year in which Oregon's first two schools - a mission school for Indian children and a subscription school in a private home - were established, the book includes every school that existed or was planned from that date.

Schools are listed twice in the book - once by school names and once by post-office of the area. All kinds of schools are included - private, public, elementary, secondary, professional, colleges and universities. Dates of opening and closing, incorporation, and approval by various rating agencies are among the information included.

LINER HIJACKED - The Portuguese liner Santa Maria, shown in the upper photo, has been hijacked by passengers in South American waters. The vessel, carrying 600 passengers, was en route from Dutch Curacao to Port Everglades, near Miami. The leader of the band of 70 heavily-armed men who seized the liner was reported to be former Army Capt. Henrique Galvao, 60, above, a bitter foe of Portuguese Prime Minister Antonio de Oliveira Salazar. (UPI Telephotos)

Local Electricity Costs Are Below Average FPC Reports

New York - How much does it cost residents of Medford for the electricity they use in their homes? How do their costs compare with those in other cities across the country?

A survey of residential electric rates, covering 4,820 cities in the United States, has just been released by the Federal Power Commission. It shows that the costs vary widely between communities. They are affected by such factors as the kind of area involved, its compactness, the distance from sources of fuel and the type of ownership of the utility.

As of Jan. 1, 1960, the typical electric bill in Medford for 100 kilowatt hours of current, which is an amount that provides lighting, refrigeration and small appliance operation, was $3.60 a month.

In the other cities, the report states, the average cost for this quantity was $4.00 per month.

For 250 kilowatt hours, which is closer to the amount that most families use, the typical Medford bill was $6.90, as compared with $7.44 elsewhere.

The range in this category is considerable. It goes from a low figure of $3, in Eugene, Ore., to a high of $11.69, in Great Barrington, Mass.

For the households in Medford that consumes current at the rate of 500 kilowatt hours a month, which takes care of lighting, cooking, air conditioning and the normal small appliances, local bills came to $10.

The average, in the rest of the country, was $10.62 per month.

The use of electricity in the American home continues to increase, according to the findings of the Edison Electric Institute. People are continually reaching out for more and more of the creature comforts available to them. These include room coolers and other air conditioning equipment, dish washing machines, electric blankets, freezers and the host of others.

During 1960, the average family used 6.4 per cent more electric energy, it states, than it did in the prior year.

In Medford's regional area, consumption rose from 8,367 kilowatt hours to 9,087, a 8.6 per cent rise.
