Young Is Named Director of Newly Merged Bank Firm

Clarence H. Young, former president of the Rogue Valley State bank, has been named a director and vice president of The Oregon Bank, C. F. Adams, president of The Oregon Bank, has announced.

The Rogue Valley State bank recently merged with The Oregon Bank.

Young will continue to manage the Rogue Valley branch in Medford. Adams said. Young has been active in banking since 1920, and for the past several years has been an officer of the Medford bank and its predecessor, the Eagle Point State bank.

Local changes in staff titles as a result of the merger also have been announced by Adams. They are Ralph E. Pierce, vice president; Glen Lusk and Richard N. Steele, assistant managers of the Rogue Valley branch; Ron E. Cordon, manager of the East Medford branch, and Robert A. Flora, assistant manager.

Adams pointed out that changes were in realignment of titles only, and no change in local personnel or operating policy would be made.

Reviews Bank Growth
In reviewing the growth of the bank in 1960, Adams noted that for the first time in its 73-year history, the bank expanded its operations outside of the Portland area.

Branches were established in Milton-Freewater, Pendleton and The Dalles.

The name of the bank was changed to The Oregon Bank because of the need for a more descriptive name resulting from the branch openings, Adams noted.

Adams noted that total resources at the end of the year were $35,905,538, which includes deposits in excess of $33 million, compared to resources totaling $30,976,827, including $28 million in deposits, at the end of 1959.

He said resources of the Rogue Valley State bank were not included in the year-end figures of resources.
