Why buy "a pig in a poke" ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ?

Reliable food processors and canners advertise their products by brand to tell you that they are proud of that product—that it is their best!

If it is not their best, if it does not come up to their standards, it is packed under some "off label." Now, these "off labels" can vary widely in quality. Some are good, some are fair, some are pretty poor food.

We have no argument with the fabulous claims of those who sell these unknown brands... BECAUSE THEY ALONE KNOW WHAT THEY ARE WORTH.

MARDI GRAS CHIEF—Nine feet two, red white and blue—and a little bit more in the way of color. This is Chief Choctaw, who will lead off the first parade in New Orleans, La., famed Mardi Gras for 1961. The chief, Algiers businessman Harry P. Rosenthal, said the costume cost more than $2,000. The tomahawk took a week to make. (UPI Telephoto)

One of Five Species Of Oregon Grape Is Official State Flower

Corvallis — Although there are five species of so-called Oregon grape in the state, only one of them is the official state flower.

If a person doesn't know the difference, chances are he hasn't the state flower in his flower garden, according to Dr. Helen M. Gilkey, retired curator of the Oregon State college herbarium. Oregon grape was selected as the state flower in 1899, some 40 years after Oregon became a state Feb. 14, 1859.

All the Oregon grape species have compound leaves made up of leaflets. These also have yellow flowers and blue grape-like berries.

But here's the difference: The state flower grows as a rather large shrub, up to 10 feet, compared to others in the state which are only about two feet high.

Besides being bushy, it has glossy green leaves which are divided into 5 to 7 spiny leaflets. The flower cluster, which is branched and branched on the state flower, is larger. Oregon grape is known either by the genus Berberis or Mahonia. Either is correct, Dr. Gilkey said.

The state flower grows in the Douglas fir woods and margins of it and in thickets where there is plenty of rainfall in Western Oregon and Northwestern Idaho and points from Washington to British Columbia.

Long-leaved Oregon grape grows in higher altitudes. It differs from the "state" one in having a simple flower cluster with 9 to 15 leaflets. It isn't as tall and the leaves aren't as shiny.

In early history, Oregon grape was made into a popular tea and was the chief ingredient in a famous spring tonic called "Pfunder's Oregon Blood Purifier."

In a more concentrated solution, the roots were used in medicine as a cathartic, stimulant to the kidneys, in dyspepsia, dysentery, typhoid fever and malaria.

The berries of Oregon grape were used for both food and drink. A yellow dye was made by steeping the twigs and bark in water.

Frolicsome Porpoise Proving Frustrating To Naval Scientists

China Lake, Calif.—(UPI)—Life in a scientific goldfish bowl doesn't seem to bother Notty, a frolicsome 3-year-old porpoise, in the least, but it's proving frustrating to a group of Navy scientists.

The scientists have been studying Notty to learn such mammalian secrets as how a porpoise can swim efficiently at great speeds with so little drag (friction) or disturbance, how it transmits and receives sounds over a distance of several miles and how it withstands deep ocean pressures beyond the known physiological capabilities of other mammals.

The answers, say the scientists at the U.S. Naval Ordnance Test Station here, could change the concept of underwater ordnance, sound detection and antisubmarine warfare.

Notty, named after the first three initials of the navy base, was captured for the Navy by Marineland of the Pacific, a commercial aquarium near Los Angeles.

Notty is six feet long, weighs 180 pounds and has been trained to wear plastic rings and swim through hoops and around obstacles—all for the scientists' benefit.

Observations of porpoises at sea indicate Notty's brothers and sisters can knife through the water at 20-30 knots 24-35 miles an hour, but clockings of Notty's speed in the water have been slower.
