The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors. (Copyright 1961—General Features Corp.)

Juliet A. — He has such a low boiling point. Allan A. — She purposely antagonizes me, just to get me mad.

Juliet A. — All during my childhood I recall my mother whispering, "Don't upset your father. You know his terrible temper." So I walked around on tiptoe, trying to stroke Dad the right way.

Now I find I'm up against the same thing in my marriage. Allan managed to conceal his low boiling point during our seven-month engagement. I thought at last I'd be able to relax and even shoot off a little of my own steam. Instead, I still must pussyfoot and pamper "the man of the house."

I can understand a man blowing up for a good reason. But Allan is unpredictable. One day he'll fly off the handle about something he didn't bat an eyelash about, the day before. Even if I try, I can't avoid the fireworks.

Allan should take himself in hand, or get help immediately. I'm still able to love him because he gets over his fits quickly and is sweet most of the time. But I can't count on this to continue.

Allan A. — Juliet exaggerates. In some subtle way she's probably trying to reform me, to make up for the fact that she had to grin and bear it with her father and couldn't reform him.

There are only a few things that make me see red. Juliet knows what they are but, instead of avoiding them, she seems purposely to wave them in my face and await the inevitable reaction.

I like order and neatness. So, it must be spitefulness that makes Juliet leave toothpaste tubes uncapped, and keep tea in the coffee canister. Why can't she take a knife and cut off a slice of bread, instead of tearing a loaf into hunks? We have plenty of ashtrays, but she throws her butts into the dish-water to douse them. I know I get mad easily. But Juliet must change herself before she can change me. The way she acts, I'll only get madder!

The Council: "Getting mad is going mad," warned an early writer as he emerged from mental illness. He referred, of course, to the self-centered, self-pitying anger that leads to destructive tantrums rather than constructive action. Allan's future health may well depend upon his ability to understand, channel, and check the eruptions (still minor) of his wrath.

But, as he suggests, Juliet may be willfully pouring oil on smouldering bonfires to see the sparks fly. This is something she couldn't do as a child, against "the man of the house." If, on the other hand, she worked with Allan to extinguish the known conflagrations and, perhaps with the aid of a guidance counselor, to discover what starts new ones and how to reduce or even prevent them then she'd be enhancing the health of her husband and her marriage at the same time.

Juliet's lack of sympathy reminds us of the mother, quoted by Jean Schick Grossman, the parent educator. "I get mad over something," she said of her son, "but he gets mad over nothing." While Allan's ire is easily triggered, he won't agree that it's over nothing!

Allan's a young man and can still become a "grown" man by practicing restraint. What he calls the "inevitable" reaction, needn't be. He can surprise Juliet by not scolding her for an irritation. (Surprise himself, too!) Losing one's temper is easy as falling off a log. The trick is to stay in balance, no matter the provocation. There's a job to do with Allan's emotional reins. They're steering him, instead of his steering them.

A temper tantrum is a luxury with a price-tag. Allan is paying for his self-indulgence in damage to his health and his marriage. With Juliet's cooperation, he can reverse his habit of spontaneous combustion and learn the greater power of the infrequent "slow-boil."

Yreka School Entered; Money from Safe Gone Yreka—Thieves entered the Jackson st. school, Yreka late Monday evening and made off with an undetermined amount of money from a small office safe.

School offices were ransacked, but not damaged. The theft was discovered Tuesday morning when school personnel arrived for work. Entry to the building was made by the use of keys which the burglars left behind.

APPROVE DAM LOAN Moscow—UPI—The Soviet parliament Thursday ratified the $810 million loan to the United Arab Republic for completion of the Aswan High Dam on the Nile river.
