Juvenile Delinquency Is Topic of Meeting

Panelists discussing problems of juvenile delinquency at a recent meeting of the McLaughlin Parent-Teacher Association agreed that recognition of pre-delinquent actions of a child is possible and treatment of such conditions would usually keep a child from getting into trouble.

Dr. Arthur Kreisman, director of general studies, Southern Oregon college, was moderator of the panel and other speakers were Medford Chief of Police Charles Champlin; Larry Tweedy, counselor at the Jackson County Juvenile Detention home; Dr. Harold Cloer, director of guidance services, Southern Oregon college; and Mrs. Owen A. Kunkel, a regional vice-president of the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers. After brief opening statements, the audience also took part in the discussion.

Dr. Cloer said that studies made recently in Chicago indicated that schools were somewhat lax in recognizing the pre-delinquent, or at least in doing something for them. Such symptoms of trouble are usually apparent to those who see the child often, and early treatment could prevent a "blow-up" caused by a build-up of frustrations (lack of parental care, difficulties with studies, loss of a loved one).

Later discussion concerned the role of cars in juvenile actions. Chief Champlin stated that he did not necessarily approve raising the legal driving age to 18, but felt that it might help some parents control their child's activities.

In a brief business meeting a nominating committee including Mrs. Walter Olson, Bert Cox and Mrs. Donald Coltrane, was elected. A rummage sale to be held in February was announced and donations for it solicited. Mrs. Richard Melum, president, presided.

At the close of the meeting there was a social hour in the school cafeteria where refreshments were served.

Curriculum Reviewed By Teachers

Central Point - The improved and expanded curriculum at Crater High school, Central Point, was outlined at a Parent-Teacher association meeting January 24. About 75 parents and teachers attended.

Instructors explained the change in emphasis which has taken place during the last four years and showed how Crater has adjusted its curriculum accordingly. Robert Bayley spoke on mathematics, Bill Russell, English, Mrs. Frances Willett, home economics; Leonard Warren, social studies; Ogden Kellogg, science, and Mrs. Barbara Tomlinson on foreign languages.

After these presentations, Charles Meyer, superintendent, gave a more comprehensive view of the curriculum change, which coordinated ideas of the preceding six teachers, showing the total district policy.

He discussed trends in curriculum, which included the use of teaching teams, closed circuit television, readers for English teachers, and a more flexible program replacing prescribed semester courses. He pointed out that these ideas are in the experimental stage and should be watched closely, evaluated critically, and adopted by District 6 only if and when they prove practical.

Mr. Meyer stated that the concern is moving back to quality in education, rather than quantity. This will lessen the emphasis on an extreme variety of offerings and switch it to the evaluation of teaching methods and teacher loads. He emphasized throughout his presentation the fact that curriculum must always remain a "study" and be open to change whenever needed.

Shown here recently, this detail appeared throughout the designer's collection. Exchange Students Talk For Travel Study Club

American Field service exchange students spoke at an international day meeting of Medford Travel Study club January 24. The speakers were Miss Deanne Taylor, who was an American exchange student to Berlin, East Germany; Miss Jill DuCroz, Tonbridge, England; and Hisayuki Kondo, an 18-year-old boy from Japan.

Miss Taylor explained the AFS exchange program, which she said began about 10 years ago in Paris, where American students were working with an ambulance service. Forty-three countries are participating in the program.

Miss Taylor observed that German families appear to have close ties and are not so "organized" outside the family as are residents of the United States. She said the Germans showed great interest in American women.

Miss DuCroz described her home, which is about 30 miles from London. Her father is a wool broker and goes daily from Tonbridge to London by train. She said the English people also are not so organized in club work and her mother has no outside activities except some charity work. She told of English education systems, which she said had more private boarding schools and are less generalized in curriculum.

The third guest, Hisayuki Kondo, said his American nickname is Don, which means "slowpoke" or someone thing similar in Japanese. The young man lives near Kobe, 300 miles from Tokyo. He said his home city is about twice as large as Portland and is famous as a foreign trade port.

He also described his family and said his father is a consultant to a chemical company. Education in Japan was explained by the exchange student, who attended a Methodist church-supported school. More study and work are required in the Japanese system than in this country, he said, and only about 30 percent of the students who apply for college entrance can pass entrance examinations.

Mrs. Ray Glidewell, Ashland, is international committee chairman of the club. Mrs. R. L. Menke, American Field service representative, introduced the speakers. A report was made on the club's community project, visitation and aid to the Medford Convalescent home. Mrs. Clay M. Lee, Medford district president, reported on district work. Other guests included Mrs. Carl W. Peterson, Ashland, past district president; Mrs. Ralph H. Foster, Ashland, president of Ashland Civic club; and members of clubs in Ashland, Rogue River, Grants Pass and Medford Junior Women's club. Forty women attended.
