

NFL Owners Worry About TV Policy

By NORMAN MILLER
New York—National Football league owners feel they must find a new way of living with the television colossus they've reared.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Friday that "we are alarmed about the future of our league if we do not change our television policy to conform to the times in which we are living."

The owners fear that under the league's present TV program, whereby NFL games are shown on three different networks, some clubs eventually might wind up with no TV income.

"From the way costs of operating pro football teams have gone up, several teams could not survive without television income," Rozelle maintained. "Costs have more than doubled during the past decade."

A "package," or single-network program for the whole league would insure TV income for all clubs, Rozelle and the owners agree.

The big hitch is how to draw up a program that will meet with the approval of the department of justice. Cite AFL Program

It is known that last spring the justice department told the NFL that such a program would not conform with the antitrust laws.

Since then, however, the young American Football league adopted a "package" program for the 1960 season and was not prosecuted.

NFL owners ask, "If they can, why can't we?"

"After innovating a television program all these years under Bert Bell, we suddenly have become copy-cats," Rozelle said. "We want to do what the NFL, the National Basketball association and the new league (the AFL) are doing. We want to put all clubs on the same network."

At present, the away-from-home games of nine clubs are shown over the CBC network; two teams use NBC and the Cleveland Browns televise over an independent network.

Rozelle said he would like a single-network program to retain the present feature of each club televising its road games back to the home area.

Woodland Paces OSC To Triumph

Portland—UPI—Crew-cut Jim Woodland, a 6-foot-1 senior guard, scored 22 points to lead Oregon State to a 58-48 college basketball victory over Portland Friday night.
