Liquor License Requests Are Considered by City Council

Liquor licenses, in one form or another, have presented the Medford city council with some perplexing problems lately, and this was nonetheless true last night when two more license requests were laid before it.

With about a dozen high school students participating in Student Government day activities looking on, the council was asked to approve a new liquor license for the former Port O'Call, Fourth and Front sts., and an expanded license for the Gay Nineties Pizza parlor, 1132 North Front st.

In considering liquor license requests the council is faced with the knowledge that Medford already has far more liquor outlets than a city of this size should have.

Yet, in the final analysis it is not the council, but the Oregon State Liquor commission that must approve liquor licenses and regulate the number of liquor outlets.

The liquor license problem was further compounded last night by an alleged misunderstanding in the case of the Gay Nineties Pizza parlor, and a dispute between creditors in the case of the Port O'Call.

Request Approved
Joe Curto, co-owner of the Gay Nineties, requested that the council approve the sale of wine by the glass in his establishment. He now has a license to sell beer only.

Councilman R. L. Van Sickle, and several other councilmen, questioned Curto regarding earlier statements made when he applied for his beer license about a year ago. Van Sickle said he remembered Curto as saying he would partition his establishment in order to separate beer-drinking adults, and pizza-eating teenagers.

Van Sickle noted that this has not been done, and that teenagers are allowed in the same room where beer is consumed. Curto denied that he said his establishment would be partitioned, and said there may have been a misunderstanding at the time of his original request.

But, Van Sickle replied that "I'll have to vote against Nunley said the creditors he represents have a $30,000 investment in the place, and they would like to get part of their investment back. He said Taylor has had a number of chances to pay the money back, but has not done so.

Nunley said that if Culby has an investment in the restaurant the corporation will make "a mutually satisfactory agreement" with him, and with all other creditors.

Several councilmen, notably Van Sickle and Fred Robinson, said they feel the council has an obligation to the creditors. The new license was approved by a 6 to 1 vote, with Councilman Donald Hanson opposed.

The request for a new liquor license for the Port O'Call was made by a group of creditors calling themselves Gourmet Inc. Walter Nunley, vice-president of the corporation, said the creditors wanted to operate the establishment in order to gain back some of the investment they lost when the place went broke.

Not in Corporation
Max Culby, 120 Genessee st., was at the meeting, and said he was also a creditor of the establishment, but was not represented in the corporation, and expressed a fear that he would not get his investment back.

The council was subjected to a prolonged, and sometimes almost heated, argument between Nunley and Bill Taylor, the former owner of the Port O'Call. Taylor contended that Nunley and the other creditors had refused to accept a fair return on their investment.
