Supreme Court OKs Damage Actions Against Policemen

Washington—UPI—The Supreme Court has approved civil damage suits against policemen who disregard the constitutional rights of suspects.

By an 8-1 vote the court ruled Monday that a Chicago Negro may use the 1871 Civil Rights Act to sue 13 police officers who broke into his home, ransacked the rooms and abused his family.

Then an James Monroe, was questioned for 10 hours at the police station about a murder, with no help from a lawyer, and finally released without being charged.

The majority, for whom Justice William O. Douglas spoke, said Monroe could not sue the city itself but he could sue the individuals concerned. Douglas brushed aside the city's argument that the only remedy is in state courts.

The decision was one of numerous actions by the court on its return from a four-week recess.

Dismisses Bus Case

Of interest at a time when the Kennedy administration's aid to education bill is before Congress was the court's dismissal of a school bus case.

Taxpayers in New Town, Conn., had challenged a law allowing free transportation to pupils of Roman Catholic and all other non-profit parochial schools. The court said the case did not present "a substantial federal question."

The effect was to (1) make final a state court decision upholding the law and (2) leave unchanged the Supreme Court's own 1947 decision sanctioning use of public funds for getting Catholic pupils back and forth from their schools.

The court agreed to look into the job security afforded under the government-approved merger of the Erie Railroad with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western. It froze the status of the workers so none would be fired at least until the case is settled.

Stevens and Walker will discuss various features of the Act, emphasizing requirements for financial reporting by unions. These reports are due by the end of March for unions whose fiscal year ended Dec. 31. Seventy to 75 per cent of the Northwest's labor unions do operate on the basis of such a fiscal year ending, according to Dr. Mark Greene, head of the business administration school's department of management, production, and marketing, and associate professor of insurance.

Two U. S. Department of Labor officials from Seattle, Wash., will conduct the seminar, which is being sponsored by the university school of business administration and the department of economics. The officials are Robert C. Stevens, acting area director of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, and Dow Walker, compliance officer in the same agency. Other labor groups will assist with the seminar.

Rep. Victor Atiyeh (R-Portland), a member of the committee, proposed extending the repeal to all personal property — a change that would take in movable equipment, office and hotel furnishings. He also proposed including farms, and was supported by Barry Brownell of the Oregon Farm Bureau Federation.

Atiyeh said this would require close to a 3 per cent business income tax to make up the lost revenue.

Spokesmen for hotels said this would be much fairer, since lodgings have no inventories, but pay a heavy personal property tax on room furnishings.

Otherwise, hotel association witnesses said, they would simply be saddled with an additional tax on top of the personal property tax.

Atiyeh also proposed a new distribution formula leading to return of 30 per cent of the revenue to counties and cities.
