The Medical Roundup

Can One Inherit Syphilis?

A young woman writes, terribly upset and almost suicidal because a doctor has told her that a blood test has shown that she has syphilis. The impression the girl has is that she inherited it from her father by way of her mother.

This, of course, is possible, but in the last 50 years since Salvarsan came into use, I have seen only a very few cases in which a person's syphilis appeared to have been inherited. In those few cases usually the cornea (window of the eye) was slightly frosted. In those cases, also, I was able to show that the young person's mother had a positive blood test for syphilis. Often, also, in those cases I could get a history that the mother had had a series of stillborn infants before a child was born who lived.

The thought that first came to me as I read this unhappy girl's letter was, "Did the doctor have the test repeated in at least two other laboratories?"

I can remember a number of cases in which a lovely woman was flattened by such a blow, and yet I was able quickly to show that when the test as repeated in at least two laboratories it showed nothing wrong.

'False-Positive' Result

In some cases either the test was in error or the girl had a blood which gave what is called a "false-positive" result. Such a result can be due to the presence in the woman of one of several diseases which will sometimes give a syphilis-like reaction. In these cases I always refer the patient to an expert on syphilis who will have a number of tests made. Often by looking at least two laboratories it showed nothing wrong.

Today, there is a special test available for the presence of the spirochete that causes syphilis, and this has brought great comfort to many persons who, after many testings with the old techniques, had been left in a most unhappy state of anxiety.

One of the awful things that happens in many cases is that once the doctor has blurted out to a lovely woman his opinion that she has syphilis, no amount of showing her that a laboratory mistake was made will ever make her feel quite clean again.

So far I have been talking about women who have always been chaste. The woman who has had several lovers can easily have contracted syphilis without ever knowing when or whence it came.

But to get back to the much-worried girl who wrote me, First, she should go perhaps to a nearby medical school where, in the department of syphilology, she can have a number of different tests made such as the Kline, the Kahn, the Hinton, and the Kolmer Wassermann. Then, if any doubt remains, she should have two of the new, more definite tests made. Also, if the doctors think it necessary, the mother and father, if they are living, can be tested.

If the tests should indicate that syphilis is really present, then the girl should have expert treatment with penicillin. If, with this, her blood reaction quickly changes to normal, she can feel happy again.

TO RECEIVE AWARD

Hollywood—Actor MacDonald Carey today was named to receive the Catholic Big Brothers Award at the 34th Catholic Big Brothers dinner Monday night.
