Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins
(Register and Tribune Syndicate 1961)

The Spider Monkey Has No Thumb

Most of the monkeyfolk have hands similar to ours, four fingers and thumb. The exception is the spider monkey of South America; nature shortchanged him by giving him the fingers but completely leaving off the thumb.

Probably the spider monkey does not miss its thumb; never having had one, he has no idea what he's been missing. Whoever coined the phrase, "keeping him under her thumb," certainly realized the importance of the thumb. This, the thumb, is the shortest, thickest and the strongest of the digits. Unlike the fingers, it has only two phalanges, or what we commonly call joints.

Useful Hand

With fingers extended, the thumb only reaches to the palm; but with the fingers bent in the position of holding, squeezing or grasping, the thumb is exactly in the right position to oppose the fingers, making the hand about the most versatile and useful instrument in all the world. The hand's usefulness is increased by the opposable thumb. It makes the human hand and that of most of the monkeys the handiest gadget with which man or monkey is endowed.

The position of the thumb is why our hands are so adaptable; just try to pick up a coin or pluck a hair from your coat collar, and you will realize the importance of the thumb. Perhaps you haven't appreciated it all you should.

Big Toe

The card player who says, "I have a hand like a foot," means it's no good; it means it's not analyzed it, but the big toe on his foot is equivalent to the thumb on his hand. But it's not opposable; therefore, the foot lacks the usefulness of his hand.

The thumb, either man's or monkey's, is even equipped with a "nail," which acts as a screwdriver or a pair of tweezers or for a hundred other purposes such as a handy implement for scratching the back of his neck.

Man has it all over the spider monkey like a tent because of this opposable thumb. Birds have a "thumb" too; the tip of each wing has a small member that is called a thumb. Look for it the next time you see a "defeathered" chicken.

The first digit on an animal's forepaw is also a thumb. But man's and monkey's are the important ones. Nothing ever devised can approach the hands in efficiency or complexity. The human hand is the most adaptable gadget in the world, and all because of what the poor old spider monkey doesn't have — an opposable thumb.
