Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

EUGENE REITMAN, sugar refining company executive, has returned with his wife from a round-the-world cruise. "It was difficult," he admits, "to get my mind off the sugar business. Take Egypt, for example. I wanted to hire a camel to ride around the Pyramids and Sphinx. So I asked a camel dealer, 'How much will the camel cost me for the afternoon?' 'That all depends,' answered the dealer. 'Do you want one lump or two?'"

Variations on a theme:
One pastor to another: "Read any good books lately?" One bird to another: "Bred any good rooks lately?" One F.B.I. man to D.A.: "Booked any good Reds lately?" One woman hater to another: "Fled any good looks lately?" One jail warden to another: "Fed any good crooks lately?"

Equator Found to Be Egg-Shaped

Columbus, Ohio, (Science Service)—The earth's equator is egg-shaped, not circular, an astronomer has found.

Imre G. Izsak, astronomer at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, Cambridge, Mass., used high-precision photographs taken by the Baker-Nunn satellite tracking cameras to discover that the equator is elliptical.

He determined the equatorial diameter is about 1,400 feet longer from a point in the Atlantic just off the eastern tip of Brazil across to a point near the Admiralty Islands above eastern Australia than the diameter from a point on the equator below Southern California across to a point below Iran.

Heart Attacks Show Relation to Salary

Chicago — (Science Service) — The lower the salary, the more likely the worker is to have a heart attack.

In a three-year study of 653 employees who had their first heart attacks, Drs. Sidney Pell and C. A. D'Alonzo of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours and company, found that the attacks occurred least often among the highest salary groups. Of the 653, 13 were women. Only 5.4 per cent of the attacks occurred when the patients were indulging in unusual physical exertion.

Interest in Ocean Research Shows Large Increase

Washington — (Science Service) — The spectacular results achieved in the race to conquer outer space overshadow an unusual interest now generating in regard to "inner space" — the oceans.

The need for oceanographic research is continually being echoed by congressional committees, the military and scientists. President Kennedy emphasized the need in both his Inaugural address and State of the Union message.

Various reasons, both practical and scientific, have been given from different quarters on why the United States' scientists should study the ocean depths. Military men point out the vulnerability of the United States to marine attack, whereas scientists stress the ocean's rich resources and its effect on weather.

Turning to Ocean
With the world's population continually mushrooming, man is now turning to the ocean to harvest its rich food crop. By learning more about the seas around us, the productivity and fertility of the sea may be increased.

The military and scientific results are difficult to separate because they are so interrelated. Jacques Piccard, noted Swiss scientist, told a Senate committee here. Some of the oceanographic data would definitely have military applications, he said.

He also pointed out that the Russians rate their ocean research second only to their space program in importance.

New Map May Show Moon Landing Areas

Cambridge, Mass., (Science Service)—A new lunar map showing where high and low areas are located is ready for the first men who land on the moon.

The contour map was prepared by Dr. Ralph B. Baldwin, astrophysicist and vice president of Oliver Machinery company, Grand Rapids, Mich. Baldwin took a series of measurements of 696 points on photographs taken with Lick Observatory's 36-inch refractor.

He then determined the contours of craters as small as one mile in diameter. He estimates the possible error for any single determination of height to be about two-fifths of a mile.

The map shows several features very clearly. All the great maria (so-called by the ancient Romans because they thought the dark areas of the moon were seas) are low areas. The areas believed by some scientists to have been formed by asteroidal impacts were found to be very low.

New York—UPI—Florida oyster growers produced more than 1.6 million pounds of the delicacy last year. This compares with only 600,000 pounds in 1955. Many northern oyster farmers are heading south to escape blight, hurricanes and cold weather that take their toll on beds.

Pack 40

Central Point — The annual Blue and Gold dinner of Pack 40, was held Monday evening at Jewett Elementary school, with Charles Martin, cubmaster, acting as master of ceremonies.

More than 200 people attended the festivities, which featured the traditional Pack 40 cake auction. Over $42 was realized through the efforts of Pete Bourroughs, who served as auctioneer. Prizes were awarded for winners of contests, and Den 11 presented a "magic" skill.

The meeting then turned to a more serious vein for the presentation of promotions and awards. Twenty-seven boys who attended the Jubilee encampment at Lake of the Woods were awarded the Jubilee patch.

U.S. Mineral Output Highest in World

Washington — (Science Service) — The United States and the Free World held a commanding lead in mineral production for 1959, the U.S. Bureau of Mines reported.

The U.S. still leads the world in producing 21 important mineral commodities, whereas the Communist countries lead in only 10. Although the Communist gains were less impressive than in previous years, the Sino-Soviet bloc did make substantial advances when compared with the 1953 production record. The large gains in the Communist sector were in the heavy industries.
