Company Released Of Manslaughter In Roseburg Case

Salem—UPI—The Oregon Supreme Court Wednesday threw out a manslaughter charge against Pacific Powder Co., Tenino, Wash., in connection with the August, 1959, Roseburg truck blast that claimed 14 lives.

"The manslaughter statutes do not apply to corporations," the high court held. The decision upheld Jackson County Circuit Court Judge James M. Main, assigned to Douglas county to hear the case.

Pacific Powder Co. owned the explosive-laden truck that was parked in downtown Roseburg when it blew up, leveling an area near the heart of the city.

Unlawfully Parked The Supreme Court said the truck "was unlawfully parked in the center of the city of Roseburg in violation of interstate commerce regulations."

In Roseburg, Douglas County Dist. Atty. Avery Thompson said he had no plans to appeal the case.

But, the opinion, written by Justice William C. Perry said, "It has generally been held that corporate criminal responsibility does not extend to crimes involving personal violence and specifically homicide or manslaughter."

The opinion said involuntary manslaughter lies legally "within the framework of homicide and the only penalties provided are either death or imprisonment, which penalties are incapable of execution against a corporation."

Means Human Being The word "person" as used in connection with homicide, the court said, "means a human being."

"It seems quite clear," the court said, "that the legislature, in enacting into law the common law definition of homicide, although dividing it into degrees of murder and manslaughter, was considering only human derelictions."

Curriculum Center Reviewed at CofC Meeting in Ashland

Ashland-James McDonald, director of the Jackson County Curriculum Center, reviewed the center's materials, demonstrated and explained functions of the center at the Tuesday noon luncheon of the Ashland Chamber of Commerce.

McDonald said the center does only what the individual schools cannot do better themselves. He outlined the development of the center. The County Superintendent's association recognized the need for a materials center 13 years ago. They spent $250 to purchase 13 films, McDonald said. He said there are now 1,500 films in the center library.

Purchases Previewed The center expanded to the point where it is now a vital part of the school systems, McDonald indicated. It is supported by the rural and county school boards and the county court, he said.

Every piece of equipment purchased is previewed and evaluated by at least two teachers, McDonald said. He outlined the four functions of the center as maintaining a library of materials, operating repair service, production of educational aids and consultation service.

Indiana University rated the center as one of the top 15 in the country for production work, McDonald commented. He demonstrated how an overhead projector can be used in teaching and how overhead transparencies are made. Tape recordings also are produced, he said.

The repair and maintenance department is necessary because there is no place between San Francisco and Portland offering rapid service. "We do our own at one-third the cost," McDonald remarked.

Maximum Effectiveness Consultation includes showing teachers and schools how curriculum aids can be used for maximum effectiveness, he said. He mentioned that the center also helps in setting up special educational facilities, such as foreign language studios.

Problems facing the center include informing teachers of the variety of materials available; making sure they receive proper classroom use, and coordination of materials so that everyone doesn't want the same item on the same day.

He said curriculum aids offer a method of accelerating the learning rate while, at the same time, maintaining quality of presentation.

Lenten Message

By BISHOP W. VERNON MIDDLETON
Bishop of the Western Pennsylvania Area, Methodist Church
(Written for UPI)

Never before has it been so necessary to understand the meaning for mankind of the life, death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Powerful forces struggle to master the minds and souls of men. From without, we face not only the threat of a godless communism, but the attractive claims of non-Christian faiths and philosophies. From within, we are confronted with a technological economy which threatens to depersonalize man and by an indifferent skepticism which scoffs at the idea of purpose and produces a moral and spiritual vacuum in human lives.

It is in this troubled world of today that the Christian faith has its most significant hour. That faith does not minimize the enormity of the struggle. Nor does it discount the legitimate criticism of the western world inherent in the human struggles erupting all over the world.

Total Gospel Story In the midst of uncertainty, fear and the general emptiness of human living, that faith maintains that the meaning of human existence and of the world itself, can best be understood in the revelation of God's purpose for man through the total Gospel story.

That faith asserts that Christ did "dwell among men" and that He did say and do the things recorded in the Gospels. In so doing He revealed the true nature of God. In His death we see the extent to which our Creator will go to reconcile God and man, and man and man. In His Resurrection we witness the demonstration that goodness is stronger than evil and cannot be destroyed, and we experience the assurance that now man does not need to walk alone.

It is through this confidence that man finds it possible to live triumphantly today, in spite of all evidence to the contrary. God still rules in the affairs of men.
