

PTA Hears Juvenile Counselor

Eagle Point - There are no religious services available to young people detained at the Jackson county juvenile detention home, according to Lawrence Tweedy, counselor for the county juvenile department. Mr. Tweedy spoke at the last meeting of the Eagle Point Elementary Parent-Teacher association; the program was titled, "Spiritual Life in the Home, School and Community."

A detained boy or girl is allowed to contact his minister at any time, Mr. Tweedy stated, but lack of space prevents services. He listed many inadequacies, while listing the hopes for expansion and improved programming which are in the planning stages.

Mr. Tweedy also stated that once a petition had been filed on an individual, it is held in strict confidence. He said that every effort is made for cases to be handled in a manner to by-pass the courts, if possible, and put them on probation to the parents. The official also emphasized that the department does not seek out individuals; trouble has to be brought to them from homes, schools, agencies or other similar agencies.

Bible Story

Mrs. Arng Todd, teacher of Bible history in the county schools, gave a flannelgraph story of the crucifixion and resurrection, as the children in the fourth, fifth and sixth grades would hear it from her six weeks.

The Rev. Warren Christensen of the Eagle Point Community Bible church told of the Bible story hour held for primary children once a week after school dismissal, but before buses leave. The adult choir from the church sang a number of spiritual selections, directed by Miss Georgia Weidman and accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Raymond Chamberlain. Donald Ulom presented a few personal viewpoints upon spiritual influence in the home. His son, Randy, gave a religious solo on his accord.

Officers were elected at the meeting. Mrs. Darrel Stanley is president; Mrs. Vernon Ragsdale, first vice-president; Mrs. Otis Hill, teacher vice-president; Mrs. Mary Barling, secretary; Mrs. Elbert Hefley, treasurer; and Mrs. Bennie Hefley, historian. On the nominating committee were Donald Pulley, James Trimble and Mrs. Lester McFall.

Mrs. Burton Jensen presented information gathered by the Jackson County Home Owners Protective association, and their viewpoints on the proposed private truck route through the Eagle Point community, and how it related to the health and safety of students attending the Eagle Point schools. The PTA membership in attendance voted upon and accepted a decision to sign the resolution in opposition to the proposed road.

Mrs. Oscar Frei, program chairman, introduced the participants in the program.

Ne-Wa-Kan-Tanda Camp Fire girls led the flag salute. Mothers of students in the third grade were in charge of refreshments.

Baking, Broiling Topic of Bulletin Issued by Service

Corvallis-Looking for ways to turn out more attractive baked dishes? Shopping for new "broiler" menus?

A new Oregon State university extension service publication "Better Baking and Broiling" is now available, free on request, at county extension offices.

Miss Bernice Strawn, OSU extension home management specialist and bulletin author, points out that although prepared mixes and convenience foods have captured a hold in family menus, cooks are still not faced with 100 per cent foolproof baking.

Oregon shoppers in some areas have a choice of 100 to 140 different mixes. Four times as many cake mixes are sold today as 10 years ago, she continues, with devil's food being a number one favorite in the West.

Mixes eliminate guesswork in measuring and selecting ingredients, but the cook still needs to use recommended baking pans suggested in the bulletin. Miss Strawn suggests easy ways to clean the oven, uses for the broiler, and automatic oven time control.

Flavorsome

Mushrooms Parisienne make a flavorsome lunch or brunch dish. Clean 1 pound of firm mushrooms and saute them in olive oil with 1 cup of chopped cooked sausage, 1/2 clove of garlic, finely chopped, a few shallots and chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Just before they finish cooking, add 1/2 cup of water and 3 jiggers of cognac. Serves 3.

Dean of Florists Recalls Years With Easter Flowers

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
New York - The Easter season stirs many happy memories for Ed McCarthy, who grew up with flowers the way some kids grow up with baseball.

"Why, I can remember," said McCarthy, 76, "when we would decorate as many as 50 churches for Easter services. Easter has been the florists' busiest season since I can remember. I think people feel impelled to send flowers because they're so happy winter's over."

"From Easter," said McCarthy, "we went right into the bridal season. Weddings started when Lent ended."

"We used to put as many as 250 lilies of the valley, each stemmed separately, into a bridal bouquet. No bride-groom orders anything that size anymore... today, anyway, it would cost him $150."

McCarthy, generally considered the dean of New York florists, was an apprentice in his father's flower shop by the time he was 11. The shop was the first in Brooklyn, and would still be operating - if New York City had not condemned the entire area to make way for a building development.

"I decided to retire instead of looking for a new location," said McCarthy. The florist now confines his horticulture to growing plants in his Brooklyn apartment and in his mother-in-law's backyard in Flatbush.

McCarthy for more than six decades furnished flowers for residents of the famous borough, and for customers nationally and internationally after the establishment of Florists' Telegraph Delivery, which links the nation's florists by wire, and Interflora, which makes possible the cabling of orders to other parts of the world.

Charlie Ebbets, creator of old Ebbets Field, home of the once-Brooklyn Dodgers, was one customer at the McCarthy shop, which his father founded in 1853.

The biggest order McCarthy can recall was for a blanket of lavender orchids when one of Brooklyn's wealthiest retail merchants died. The orchids entirely covered the casket, he said, and cost the family $5,000 in the year 1912.

To liven up spring tables make a "Spring Basket salad" pretty enough for a party and delicious as an appetizer, salad or breakfast fruit. Just cut a 1/4 inch strip around top of grapefruit half, being sure to leave two sections across from each other uncut. Lift cut strips and tie together for handles; garnish with violets, forsythia sprigs or other spring flowers. To serve four, cut two dessert grapefruit in half and trim for "handles"; with grapefruit knife or spoon remove fruit and membranes from rind. Cut fruit sections from membranes, reserving juice. Combine with 1/2 diced medium-sized avocado, 1 sliced banana and 1 chopped apple, which have been dipped in grapefruit juice. Dash with aromatic biters, if desired. Pile into baskets; pull handles up and tie.
