Radiological Course Set for Highway Men

The Red Cross building, 60 Hawthorne ave., will be turned into a radiological survey training ground Thursday as Oregon state highway department maintenance workers make a special civil defense radiological monitoring course.

Maintenance foremen, foremen helpers, and other key highway maintenance personnel will probe for hidden radioactive capsules, read dosimeters, and chart radiation levels as part of the one-day training given by the state highway department as part of its civil defense preparedness assignment as a state agency.

The Medford exercise is one of a state-wide series to teach the theory and use of radiological survey instruments.

More than 100 highway workers in the Salem, Newberg, Portland, and Astoria areas have advanced taken the course under the direction of John F. Hagemann, emergency planning engineer for the state highway department, and C. Wayne Dugan, representing the Salem office, U.S. bureau of public roads. Other classes are being held this week in Eugene and Roseburg.
