First Lady Is Late For Opera

Washington—UPI—Mrs. John Kennedy, bearer of the New Frontier's cultural banner, went to the opera Thursday night—43 minutes after the scheduled curtain time.

The President's wife and Mrs. Lyndon Johnson, the vice president's wife, attended a performance of Carmen in separate parties. Mrs. Johnson was on time, but Mrs. Kennedy missed the curtain even after it had been held up half an hour.

A number of less famous patrons of the opera were disgruntled when they found themselves afoot after the opera. Police towed away several cars and moved others to make way for the White House limousines.

A full house of theatergoers promenade up and down the aisles during intermission to gawk at the leading ladies in the administration. True to her reputation for elegance, Mrs. Kennedy wore a pencil slim white and black silk polka dot sheath with a black satin belt and a boat neckline. Her wrap was a short black broadtail bolero jacket. She had on long black gloves and black velvet bows in her hair.

Rate Yourself—New York—UPI—The "average" home owner is above average in income, car ownership, education and appliance ownership reports Dr. Stewart H. Britt, professor of marketing at Northwestern University. His report is based on study of 2,883 families. The study, sponsored by the Theatre-Screen Advertising Bureau, also showed that 86 percent of the families attending outdoor theatres own their own homes.

Winning east-west in this section were Mrs. L. V. Espey and Mrs. J. J. Finegan, first, 104 1/2; Dr. and Mrs. M. E. Corthell, second, 91; Mrs. Fred Burich and Mrs. Fred Rehling, third, 90 1/2; Mrs. Ricker and Walter Grow, fourth, 87 1/2.

Prizes furnished by the Department of Oregon, American Legion auxiliary, were awarded to veterans who held high scores for March play. They went to Mr. Humes, first; Mr. Grow, second; William Vail, third; John Foley and Franklin Gilbert, who tied for fourth and fifth; John Levine, sixth.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Lewis Smith. There's A Party New York—UPI—Mother is the key to a successful children's party—the hostess behind the little host or young hostess. In a booklet on "Kids Party Ideas," Dell Publishing Co. makes the point that the "mom behind the party" is a combined recreation director, fairy godmother, jill-of-all trades and magician.

Youthful German Actress Approves Peace Corps Plan

By GAY PAULEY UPI Women's Editor New York—UPI—President Kennedy has a staunch backer for his Peace Corps in Almut Eggert, a youthful German actress.

Miss Eggert believes that the more others get to know Americans at the everyday level, the more they'll like us, instead of disliking us as so many foreigners actively do.

"If they hate you, it's because they don't know you," said the 21-year-old Miss Eggert, who has just completed a cross-country tour talking to civic, church and college and high school groups in connection with a new documentary film in which she is a featured player.

"I had a chance to meet thousands of you," she said. "I'm impressed with America's vigor and strength... its fresh quality... by so many who want to know more of what's going on in the Communist world."

Plays Girl's Role The blonde actress, who was born at Rostock in what is now the Eastern zone of Germany plays the role of a teenage girl in the Louis de Rochemont film "Question 7."

The story depicts present-day pressures on the Christian church by the Communist state and is based on incidents in and documents from the Eastern zone. The documentary was filmed at Moelln, a town nine miles from the border dividing East and West Germany. For six weeks the West German community was transformed into a "socialist town" with Red banners flying from city hall, schools and factories, and posters of East German leaders and Soviet peace messages scattered all over town.

At openings in various cities in the United States, she said, the film drew a general reaction of "What can we do about such a situation?" Parents in Theater Miss Eggert, married and the mother of a one-year-old daughter named Bettina, said her parents left East Germany 10 years ago. Her mother was an actress but has retired; her father was a theater director and now teaches dramatics at the University of Mannheim.

Miss Eggert studied acting in Heidelberg, Paris and Berlin. She learned English in Berlin, when to meet expenses she took a part-time job as a manicurist in a beauty salon catering to Americans.

The actress, a Berlin resident, has done all types of roles from the classics of Shakespeare and Chekhov to modern comedy and drama. She has made six films in Germany and France. In "Question 7," she appears in her first English-speaking role.

A small woman with wide blue eyes and a complexion even an English girl would envy, Miss Eggert seems an unpretentious person. "I have very little jewelry," she said, "and no milk coat."

Heavenly Sneezes New York—UPI—It probably won't relieve the drudgery at all—but everytime a home-maker dusts the furniture, she's dealing with stardust. Dr. Roy G. Brereton of the advanced research team at Aerojet-General, said that about 5 million tons of this dust fall on the earth each year.

If a marketing test shows the things sell, soon you'll be able to buy survival kits in the supermarket. Each kit, for use in case of atomic assault, contains 42 servings of multi-purpose food, 14 pints of canned water, 14 doses of vitamin C, a can opener and hardware.

New Flower Varieties Listed for Gardeners

By EDNA KING MANDEVILLE This year, as usual, there are so many new flower varieties available that it must be most confusing to the average home gardener. Which, of all those colorful packets, are the right ones for you and your garden? Well, here are my favorites from among the new varieties, with special emphasis on those that are easy to grow.

At the very top of my list is the silver medal all-America winner, Gloriosa double daisy. Received with more enthusiasm by the judges than any other 1961 entry, it is a flower which should delight all gardeners. Beginners will find it easy to grow, and more experienced gardeners will find it unlike anything they have grown before. If you are careful not to plant the seeds any deeper than the packet says, success is almost certain. As their name implies, the golden-yellow flowers are simply "glorious."

Thin dark velvet centers add contrast to the planting, and your garden will be truly enriched by these fully double and semi-double blossoms. Though the flowers bloom profusely the first year, the variety is a perennial that will live through the winter.

Next on my list is Halo zinnia, a lovely flower that comes to us from Copenhagen, Denmark. Its name derives from the bright circle around each blossom, formed by the golden tips of rich velvety mahogany petals. The blossoms measure about an inch and a half in diameter, and are of the single type, quite different from most zinnias. However, they do share the zinnia's main virtue—they are easy to grow.

Coral Satin petunia is another color of the popular "Satin" strain of Fl hybrid multiflora flowers. As you may remember, Red Satin was the original color of this group—a blossom so superior to all other red petunias that it received an All-America Award. Now the lovely deep coral-rose flowers of Coral Satin have made it the second all-America winner in the Satin strain. But let me suggest that you buy the pelleted seeds of this particular variety, as they are much easier to handle in planting. Pelleted seeds can be sown directly in the garden or started inside for earlier blooms.
