The Medical Roundup

Doctors Did Not Always Talk to Patients

I was much interested to read recently that a hundred years ago many teachers of medicine strongly advised their young colleagues and students never to talk to their patients; never to explain their disease to them, and particularly—never to say anything to the relatives. The idea was—the less you say, the less trouble you get into.

It is recorded that once, many years ago, an old family doctor was compelled by the anxiety of a patient's relatives to call in consultation a young teacher from the nearby Medical School. The young doctor came and soon made a diagnosis of the then common and much dreaded typhoid fever. Quickly he then answered all the questions of the much worried members of the family. He warned them that the patient could hardly hope to get well before another five weeks, and he told them that they must not be too alarmed if, at times, their loved one's mind wandered a bit.

As the two doctors left the house, the old one, much annoyed, said to the young one, "Look, in 15 minutes you said more to those people than I have said to them in 15 years!" To me, the very interesting item in this story is that the young man was so kind as to answer all the questions of that anxious family because the world's greatest and most loved physician—Sir William Osler, who did so much to make the Johns Hopkins Medical School famous, and who ended his days as Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford, England.

Cancer is one of the worst killers in the country. Don't be among its victims—protect yourself with information about the disease. Flight Engineers To Appeal Firing

Los Angeles—(UPI)—Western Air Lines flight engineers, dismissed during a recent nationwide wildcat strike, will appeal their firing to the U.S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco, an attorney for the 123 men said today.

Attorney Charles Hackler said he would appeal a federal district judge's dismissal of a petition for reinstatement of the engineers, who were fired in February as a result of the walkout that shut down Western and six other major carriers.

Hackler said the other companies let their engineers return to work without penalties at the request of President Kennedy's appointing a fact-finding committee to investigate the engineers' grievances. Western officials contended the engineers violated their contract by striking and began hiring and training pilot-qualified flight engineers to take their places.
