Question of Paving On Lynwood Aired At Council Meeting

Was or was not all of Lynwood ave. ever paved? This is a question facing the Medford city council. Hinging on its decision is the matter of who will pay for now badly needed street repairs.

Residents living along Lynwood ave. claim that all of the street was once paved. Several city officials believe that only part of it was paved. Lynwood ave. is located in the Verde Hills subdivision, which was developed in 1951, 1952 and 1953. That portion of Lynwood being disputed is located between Roxy Ann place and Keene Way dr.

A delegation of Lynwood ave. residents appeared at last week's city council meeting and claimed that Lynwood ave. had been paved with low-cost surfacing along with a number of other streets in the subdivision in 1953. Scattered Paving In 1960 the city scuffed what paving there was on all of Lynwood ave. and then rolled it. The city then repaved Lynwood from Siskiyou you Blvd. to Roxy Ann place, but did nothing to the rest, claiming it was the residents responsibility since that portion of the street had never been paved in the first place.

H. A. Hurlbut, 301 Lynwood ave., speaking for approximately a dozen Lynwood ave. residents Thursday night, told the council he had contacted both the subdivision developer, the General Development company, and Floyd Somers, a paving contractor. Representatives of both firms contend that the street was paved, and Somers said he remembered paving it himself, according to Hurlbut.

The city contended on the other hand, that the portion of Lynwood was covered with a dust palliative, and not low-cost surfacing. The city council elected to consult the records of the city engineering department, the records of the subdivider and any other records that can be obtained to come up with the answer at the next meeting, if possible.

The Week in California 33 Condemned Men End 7-Day Hunger Strike in San Quentin

By United Press International All but two of the 33 condemned men on San Quentin prison's Death Row ended their seven-day hunger strike with a hearty lunch of beef stew, noodle soup, mashed potatoes, beet salad and lima beans.

The two holdouts were Luis Moya, 23, and Marion Linden, 47, both convicted murderers from Los Angeles. The Death Row inmates began their strike April 14. A few days later, they submitted a list of demands for more and better fare, a new cook and a new barber.

During the strike the prisoners ate candy, peanuts and other foods obtained at the prison commissary.

Turn Down Requests However, the prison food began looking a little better at week's end after Warden Fred Dickson turned down their list of demands - and threatened to feed them intravenously if the strike continued much longer.

In Los Angeles, Dr. R. Bernard Finch, his face showing no emotion, and Carole Tregoff, tears streaming down her cheeks, went their separate ways to begin serving life prison terms for murdering the surgeon's wife.

Finch, 43, was taken in a sheriff's station wagon from county jail to the California Institution for Men at Chino. After processing, he was to be transferred to San Quentin prison.

Miss Tregoff, who declined to answer any questions from reporters, had her red hair in a new upswep halo when she was removed from the jail to the California Institution for Women at Corona. She was expected to remain there during the full period of her confinement. Narcotics Report From Sacramento came a report by the State Bureau of Criminal Statistics that "perhaps 10,000 to 20,000 persons in California routinely engage in illegal narcotic activities - primarily narcotic use."

The bureau said that from October, 1959, to June, 1960, there were 13,663 juvenile arrests, including 1,148 narcotic arrests.

Among the juvenile arrests, about two-thirds stemmed from possession, sale or use of marijuana. A total of 101 juveniles were arrested for offenses involving heroin or other narcotics.

Elsewhere, there were these developments: Oscars: Elizabeth Taylor, recuperating from a near fatal illness, won the Academy Award Oscar for top actress of 1960 for her role in "Butterfield 8." The best actor award went to Burt Lancaster for his portrayal of a preacher in "Elmer Gantry." Shirley Jones was winner of the best supporting actress award for her role opposite Lancaster in "Gantry" and Peter Ustinov took home a supporting actor award for his part in "Spartacus." The top film accolade was given "The Apartment."

Wente: Herman L. Wente of Livermore, one of the nation's leading wine makers, died at a Boston hospital. A spokesman at the hospital said Wente, 68, had been a patient for a leg operation. He was vice president and general manager of Wente Bros. Winery of Livermore.

Population: California's population may soar to 22 million or even higher by 1970 if the economic picture continues bright. That was the prediction of Maurice Van Arsdale Jr., University of Southern California sociologist in an address in Los Angeles. Van Arsdale said that to attract a continuous flow of migrants, 250,000 new jobs will be required by 1970 both for the incoming migrants and for the young native workers entering the job market for the first time.

Alasilo: Frank Marrone was convicted in San Diego of both kidnaping and conspiracy for masterminding the abduction of wealthy sportsman Anthony Alessio for $200,000 ransom. Two other defendants, Robert Gorman and his wife, Ruby, also were found guilty of both kidnaping and conspiracy. However, the jury of eight women and four men acquitted both Marrone's wife, Selma, and Richard Clavesilla of all charges in the case. Marrone, 31, a convicted murderer, was accused of plotting the Nov. 22 kidnap of Alessio, the oddsmaker at Agua Caliente race track. Alessio was held almost two days in a San Diego motel before his brother, John, dropped off the $200,000 in ransom at a Hollywood parking lot.

Defense: President Kennedy assured Gov. Edmund G. Brown that defense contracts would not be diverted from California to depressed areas in other states. Brown, who met with Kennedy in Washington, said he told the President that California wanted only its "fair share" of defense business.

Incorrect Listing Results in Error Due to an incorrect listing in information supplied by the county clerk's office the circuit court records in Friday's Mail Tribune stated that a divorce decree had been granted Ruby and Irene McCleary and Andrews Jackson McCleary.

The Mail Tribune was not notified that it was an "appearance" and not a "decree" in time to prevent its publication.
