Does It Help To Spend Much Money Examining A Defective Child?

A mother writes from Brazil that she is bringing her defective child to the United States in the hope of finding a cure. The doctors in Brazil have told her, doubtless truthfully, that no one can make a child such as hers develop properly.

There are a number of objections I have to this woman's making the trip. First, she may waste thousands of dollars for the education of two or three very bright children. Second, she will insist on doctors' wasting thousands of dollars on useless "complete examinations" because she thinks that a very thorough examination will somehow lead to a cure. It won't.

Third, if the doctor, who with a glance at the child, knows all he needs to know about his or her mental retardation, or apathy, or dwarfism, says kindly to the woman, "Don't ask me to examine the child; I don't need to; and I don't enjoy taking your money for nothing," the mother will think he is an ignoramus, or he is lazy, or he does not like her, and she promptly will hunt up another physician.

Diagnosis on Street

It is unfortunate that today thousands of people do not know that a good doctor often can make the proper diagnosis with a glance at the patient.

Recently a patient entered my office and it was no trick at all to diagnose a little tumor in the man's pituitary gland—before I saw him. He had a raucous voice that is peculiar to some men with such a tumor. I mention these facts, not to brag, all able physicians diagnose many diseases at a glance; I mention this type of diagnosis only to strengthen the plea I here make to every mother with a defective child that if a doctor tells her he does not need to make a big examination, and does not want to take her money to no purpose, she must not think he is stupid or careless; he is a fine honest man, and she had better listen to what he says and do what he tells her to do. He is right.

Many another doctor, from mistaken ideas of kindness, will spend $150 examining the child, and then will say, "Keep hoping," which means that she will keep traveling about until her money is gone.
