Spiritual, Material Worth Of Gospel Mission Reviewed

Three speakers at Monday's Chamber of Commerce round-table luncheon attested to the Medford Gospel Mission as being both a spiritual and a material asset to the community.

Speaking on behalf of the mission were Medford Police Lt. Jack McMillan for the law enforcement viewpoint; Clarence Wilson for the viewpoint of a businessman; and Dr. D. Kirkland West, for the viewpoint of the ministry. The mission is of value to all three.

These three men along with Glenn McCullough, a member of the mission's board of directors, are seeking to enlist the support of the business community for a new mission to be erected on Front st. across from the central fire station.

Each man spoke of the aims, goals and accomplishments of the 2-year-old mission as he saw it. Wilson then informed the businessmen assembled at the roundtable that each would be contacted to help financially with the proposed mission.

Wilson said the mission has taken an option on the property across from the fire station. The option expires May 26, he said, and in order to secure the property a $4,000 down payment must be raised before then. The total cost of the property is $10,000.

Lieutenant McMillan was the first to speak. He said that before the mission was established in Medford there were not enough places for indigent or "down-and-out" persons to stay in the city.

When persons would come to the police department seeking shelter for the night, McMillan said, "It was not very pleasant to be able to tell them, 'I'm sorry, but we just don't have anything we can do for you.'"

The police lieutenant said that before there was a Gospel Mission on Front st., it was necessary to have three men patrolling the street. But now, he said, it is necessary to only have one officer on a part-time patrol of Front st. He called this, "a savings to the taxpayers."

Great Admiration
McMillan said the police department has a "fond feeling" and a "great admiration" for the mission and added that "it fills a real community need." He said the department recognizes that there are other organizations who also help with transients, but noted that their facilities alone are not enough. The second speaker was Dr. West, who discussed the human factor of the mission. He said the "very main purpose" of the mission is a spiritual one. The mission, he said, tries to get both to the "heart" of the matter, and the "man."

The First Presbyterian church minister said that the mission is accomplishing this spiritual goal. He explained there are now two men in the church who were "straightened out" by the mission. He pointed out that members from the majority of churches in Medford go to the mission to help. He said many of these people that go to the mission to help, "find Christ in a more real way" than they would at church. He challenged his audience at the roundtable to go to the mission themselves and "stand up and tell what Jesus Christ means to you." Dr. West said they would all be better for it. Value to Community

The minister said the community owes more than it can ever repay to the people at the mission. "They rescue the jehsam and flotsam and make it useful and worthwhile again."

"We can do nothing less than give this the full support and enthusiasm and backing that it deserves." Clarence Wilson, president of the mission's board of directors, was the last to speak. He reviewed in brief the founding of the mission and said Fred Robinson of Robinson Brothers Clothing store, was the "guiding force" behind it.

Wilson said Mission Superintendent Willard Howard was recruited from Bakersfield, Calif., two years ago. Howard, Wilson said, had retired from his regular business and had wanted to go into mission work. The Howards get $100 a month for their efforts, he said. Industry Within Itself
Wilson called the mission "an industry within itself." He said it fills a need in the community that no other industry in the community can, and asserted that it saves the taxpayers of Jackson county "untold amounts of money" by making men out of bums.

During its two years of existence the mission has served 39,347 meals, accommodated 17,042 visits to the chapel, and had its 21 beds used 17,042 times. In addition, the mission has given away thousands of articles of clothing to both men and families.

In doing all this, Wilson estimated that the mission has spent no more than $8,000 in cash. All of the meals, and much of the time spent preparing them, have been donated. He said: "It's evident that there's somebody looking on from above."

Wilson indicated that this month will be the first time the mission has gone out into the business community and solicited funds.

Dr. West, Wilson, McCullough, and Chief of Police Charles P. Champlin, for whom McCullough substituted Monday, will be available to speak for the mission and its hopes for the future for the benefit of any valley organization. Arrangements for one of these speakers may be made by contacting McCullough at Spring 3-7441.

Funds Asked for Research Work On Pear Decline

Washington (UPI) - Congressmen from California, Oregon and Washington appeared before a House committee Monday to urge a "crash program" of research into a disease which threatens to wipe out the Pacific coast pear industry.

The congressmen asked the House Appropriations committee to approve a $180,000 research program to unlock the secrets of pear decline, a disease which already has killed thousands of pear trees in the three states.

The Agriculture department has budgeted $90,000 for the research program, but the West coast congressmen want the amount doubled.

Rep. Harold T. Johnson (D-Calif.) told the committee that approval of the expanded program would mean that six scientists could concentrate on the problem. The Agriculture department now has only one man working on the disease.

Rep. Clem Miller (D-Calif.) said California had budgeted $284,000 for pear decline research, compared with $200,000 for the present fiscal year ending June 30.

Miller told the committee that California agriculture officials had estimated that the rapidly spreading disease could cause a loss of about $4,500,000 in next year's crop.

The program outlined for the House committee was drawn up recently in Berkeley, Calif., at a meeting of experts from federal and state agriculture departments, Pacific coast universities and the pear industry.

City Administration At Oceanlake Resigns

Oceanlake, Ore. - (UPI) - This seaside resort town was without most of its city administration today after the police chief, mayor, municipal judge and a city councilman resigned Monday night in a stormy council meeting.

Police Chief Al Barzee resigned when the city council refused to uphold his authority to fire a patrolman, Louis DeVarney.

In protest, Mayor Ben Bliert walked out saying he wouldn't work with a council that would let a man like Barzee go.

Ed Eaton, city councilman, stormed out for the same reason, followed by Municipal Judge Richard Bennett.

The three remaining members of the city council accepted Barzee's resignation on the spot, but said they would consider the others.

Barzee said he found DeVarney asleep in a patrol car while on duty. He suspended him. The city council on April 20 put the matter over until Monday night's meeting.

It was then decided that DeVarney would be retained on the force. The situation leaves the neighboring communities of Taft and Delake also without a police chief. Oceanlake police patrol the two towns by contract.

Barzee said today he didn't know what the next step would be, but added, "I'm definitely out."
