

IT HAS BECOME fashionable to characterize the American teen-ager as a snarling, don't-tell-me-anything rebel.

Since I've been scouring the country for FAMILY WEEKLY Miss Somebodies, I've been relieved to find that this type of teen-ager is rare. Certainly Kathy Johnson of Trenton, N. J., the sixth "unknown" girl to become a Miss Somebody, isn't one of them.

A junior at Trenton Central High School, 16-year-old Kathy is a tall (5-foot-7), raven-tressed, Ava Gardner-type beauty.

Born in the same modest house in Trenton she lives in now, Kathy consciously centers her life around her parents, Boyd and Jane Johnson, and her 19-year-old sister Carol. It's a familiar sight to neighbors to see the Johnsons piling into the family auto on Sunday after they've attended services at the Broadstreet Methodist Church to drive to nearby Princeton for a day of horseback riding.

Kathy is a straight "A" student at school "because I work hard and study at least four hours a day. I want to be a medical technologist (you know, do lab work, blood tests, and things), and that means college and good marks."

The late Dr. Tom Dooley of MEDICO has been her inspiration. A snapshot of him still hangs over her bed. She wrote to him several times. When he answered one of her letters with: "Your concern and kind thoughts are rain for my roots and fuel for my fire . . ." she began to gather supplies to send to his jungle hospitals.

"Her medical aspirations actually began long before she had ever heard of Dr. Dooley," her father recalls. "Even when she was a little girl, her favorite Christmas toy was a doctor's kit. She was forever pasting bandages on us and prescribing little candy pills."

One might expect a popular beauty like Kathy to have a life complicated by plenty of dates. That's not the case, however. Kathy says: "I like dates, but I'm old enough to realize it can be overdone. A Sunday football-game date is nice. Dating several nights a week is another story. Besides," she adds shyly, "I sort of like older boys, and I haven't met too many."

KATHY, unlike most of her contemporaries, entertains no theatrical dreams. "I study drama in school and love it, but I like algebra better," she maintains. "Being a medical technologist and helping people means much more to me. Sounds dull, but it's exciting to me."

Kathy is a teen-ager any parent would be proud of; just as FAMILY WEEKLY is proud to present her as a gorgeous, wholesome cover girl and Miss Somebody.

Whether it's for outdoor jaunts or indoor projects, the Johnsons are a family that often get together. Here, Carol (left), Kathy, Mom, and Dad are enjoying a favorite game.
