A Confusing Situation

West Explains Floor Numbering Pattern in Capital Buildings

By DICK WEST

Washington—Visitors to the U.S. Capitol frequently complain that the system of lettering and numbering the floors of the various buildings is confusing.

Kennedy Releases Army Reservists

Washington—(UPI)—President Kennedy has freed two Army reservists who got into trouble for complaints about the delay in releasing troops called to active duty in the Berlin crisis.

Kennedy told a news conference he had ordered the Army to cancel the pending court martial of Pfc. Larry D. Chidister, who sent a letter to his senator protesting a delay in setting a date for his return to civilian life.

Chidister, an Army national guardman, is stationed at Ft. Lewis, Wash.

The President also announced that he had directed the Army to cancel the remainder of the six-month sentence of Pfc. Bernis G. Owens, a reservist court martialled at Ft. Polk, La., for his statements in connection with a "we want out" demonstration.

thought it might contribute to better understanding between the public and the Congress if I undertook to explain how the system works.

It's simple, really, and once you get the hang of it you have no trouble finding your way around, particularly if there is a guard handy to give you directions.

For instance, if we enter the new House Office Building through the main door, we might think of ourselves as being on the ground floor. But technically we will be on the first floor, the ground floor or the street floor, depending on how you look at it.

Or, if we enter the main door of the old House Office Building, we will be on the second floor, which corresponds to the first floor of the new building.

Technically, the old building does not have a ground floor, so its street level is either the first floor or the second floor. You follow me thus far? Very well. If we now take an elevator to the lowest level, we will be on what is technically known as the basement floor. Here we will see a sign which says "subway to the fourth floor."

This doesn't mean the subway runs to the fourth floor. It means the elevators run from the subway to the fourth floor.
