

Club Members Hear Review of Proposed Charter

"Shall we or shall we not run our own affairs" is the way Dr. Arthur Kreisman sized up the question of home rule in Jackson county.

Speaking at a luncheon meeting of the Medford Rotary club Tuesday at the Rogue Valley Country club, the professor of English and humanities at Southern Oregon college and member of the county's home rule committee emphasized that the approval of home rule in Jackson county will not affect O and C funds.

Emphasizing the non-partisan approach to home rule here, Dr. Kreisman pointed out that the group of commissioners selected by voters would not seek office on a partisan basis. Instead, he said, the system would work in a way similar to Medford's city government. The plan is not aimed at any party but seeks only to free Jackson county of legislative control and achieve greater efficiency.

Flexible Charter

The proposed charter was arrived at after long deliberation by a committee composed almost equally of representatives of both parties. It is completely flexible and can be changed later as conditions demand and experience dictates.

There were 27 measures presented before the last legislature by the League of Oregon counties and all but three were acted upon, the speaker reminded Rotarians. Both the counties' and state's problems have become more complex as population of both increased. The antiquated system of a century ago does not spell efficiency and economy and does not give citizens a full vote in electing county officials. The $4 million Jackson county business needs people selected on the basis of qualifications for various jobs and the proposed home rule charter will make this possible.

Dr. Kreisman concluded his address with reminder that this county should run its own affairs and try the program set up by the committee here whose existence was made possible by initial legislative action. Jackson county approved the formation of such a committee by a two to one vote.

FCC Official To Speak at Meeting

Eugene—Robert T. Bartley, federal communications commissioner from Washington, D.C., will be a featured speaker at the April 27-28 conference of the Oregon Association of Broadcasters.

Meetings of the OAB, which will draw broadcasters from radio and television stations of the state, will be held at the Village Green in Cottage Grove, according to Karl J. Nestvold, general manager of the Association and instructor in journalism at the University of Oregon.

Speakers on the program include Chancellor Roy E. Lieuallen of the Oregon State System of Higher Education, whose luncheon topic Friday will be "Education is News."

Other speakers are John H. Hulteng, professor and dean-elect of the University's School of Journalism; Wally Hunter, former executive director of the Republican State Central committee; Bill Marsh of W. W. Marsh and Associates, Portland; and Jack Sugg of Cole and Weber, Portland advertising agency.

A discussion of FCC license renewal inspection procedure, and a new U.S. Weather bureau forecasting presentation will be held.

College to Start Certificate Program

Weed—Next fall College of the Siskiyou will offer a certificate program for the first time. A student will be business, education, engineering and real estate.

The business education certificates are offered in these areas: agriculture, clerk typist, medical-dental secretary, stenographer, and secretary. All are two year courses except for the medical-dental secretary and stenographic certificate which are one year courses.

The other two certificate programs to be offered outside of business are engineering and real estate. Engineering is a two year course, but real estate may be completed in one year.

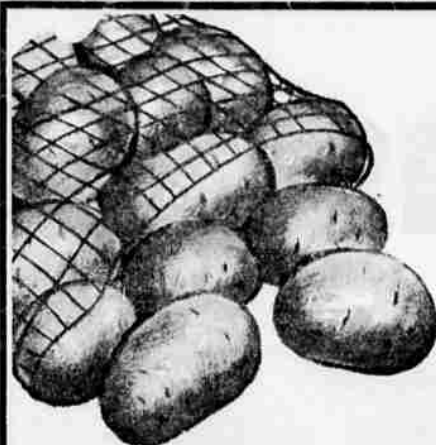

Persons interested in any of these programs should consult the college catalog for requirements.

In most cases, a student may combine the units earned in these courses for certificates with graduation requirements and receive an associate in arts degree with their certificate.
