Up To Four Hours Wait Required To Cross Columbia

Salem—UPU—Deputy State Highway Engineer G. S. Paxson has confirmed that there are waiting periods of up to four hours to cross the Columbia river at Astoria, but he said delays of this length are few in number.

Vehicle traffic on the three state-owned ferries that operate between Astoria and Megler, Wash., goes up sharply in the summer because of tourists, but Paxson said that even then there are "very few" waiting periods during the week.

On summer week ends, he said, the waiting period to cross is usually 30 to 35 minutes.

Paxson said there are a "few exceptions" on those summer week ends when the tide is right and clamping on southwest Washington beaches is good. On those few week ends, he said, many Oregon residents use the ferries, and there have been jams with waiting periods of several hours.

On April 18 a group of officials from the Oregon coast called on Gov. Mark Hatfield and complained that the ferry system is antiquated, citing waits of up to four hours. They want the Highway Department to buy another ferry and improve the service, but the department doesn't want to because in 1965 the Astoria-Megler bridge will open, and the ferries will be abandoned.

Cannery Workers Outline Demands

Salem—UPU—Salem local 670 of the Cannery Workers Union has outlined its demands for new 1962 contracts to cover up to 6,000 workers in 17 packing plants in Albany, Corvallis, Salem, Woodburn, Stayton, Newberg and Dundee.
