O. AND A. ON RETRAINING LAW

Our country's historic experiment in Government-financed training and retraining of America's unemployed is about to begin.

The "Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962" has been on the books since Mar. 15. It authorizes the federal government to spend $435 million over the next three years to finance the training of at least one million men and women with obsolete or insufficient skills. The schedule calls for training to start this summer.

This is a major breakthrough toward solution of the problem of long-term joblessness among young and old in the U.S. For the success the industrialized nations of Europe have had with programs on which we based our legislation underlines the significant fact that retraining does work.

But these are generalities. Surely what you want to know to help yourself or a jobless neighbor are specifics—who can qualify, what sort of aid, etc. Here are the key answers.

Q. Who qualifies for the free training?

A. Just about any person who is unemployed because he hasn't sufficient skills to fill a job. The law specifically mentions heads of households who have been employed not less than three years in the past, unemployed youths 16 years or older, workers in farm families with less than $1,200 a year net family income. Those working part time because they're not adequately trained to get full-time jobs would qualify—although those without any job at all naturally will be given preference at this stage. Free training will be broad.

Q. What cash allowances are authorized?

A. A weekly training allowance for up to 52 weeks equal to the average weekly unemployment payment in the state in which the trainee lives. The national average for unemployment compensation is $35 a week, but the average varies widely from state to state, runs from as little as $22 to as much as $42.

Q. Who can get the cash allowances?

A. They are limited to two groups: Unemployed heads of families who have had not less than three years of employment in the past, and youths 19-21 years old. The 19-21 youths are limited to not more than $20 a week, though, and the payments to them are restricted to 5 per cent of the total authorized for training allowances. The major aid clearly is for older workers whose jobs have disappeared.

Q. Where will the training be given?

A. In existing schools through the country—public and private schools, vocational training centers, colleges with vocational training facilities. The law also requires the Secretary of Labor to promote on-the-job training by states, private companies, trade associations, labor organizations—and for this sort of training, the government will foot part of the cost.

Q. What if an unemployed has to travel to get training?

A. He'll get travel pay of 10 cents a mile and living expenses of up to $35 a week if he must go to training facilities not within commuting distance of his residence. This will be in addition to the cash allowances given to groups qualifying for them.

Q. What type of training will be given?

A. Emphasis will be on developing skills that are definitely needed now and shifting those with aptitudes into work for which they're best fitted. A man with no aptitude for mechanics might be trained for a service job—say, in a hospital. One with distinct aptitudes might be trained to operate a computer.

Q. What should a person do to get the training?

A. Go to your state employment office, indicate your interest in getting training right now, keep following up on developments as they occur. As procedures are worked out by the federal government, the information will be passed on to the state agency.

There's bound to be stumbling as the program gets under way. But with this training law, we're on one right road to the solution of unemployment in the U.S. The other road, of course, is economic growth at a sufficient rate to provide the jobs needed.

Walsh Says Publicity on Tax Situation Is 'Healthy Thing'

By JOE COWLEY

Mail Tribune Staff Writer: "All this publicity on delinquent personal property taxes is a healthy thing. I would not have been disturbed by the future created," Sheriff Joe Walsh said yesterday afternoon.

The sheriff returned home last week end after being out of town due to illness in his family. He was not here when the Mail Tribune made all four publications of classified advertising listing delinquent personal property taxes, nor when the Mail Tribune published a front page story noting that the delinquent personal property taxes totalled $481,016 as of April 30.

County Judge Earl Miller remarked that the April 30 story was "personal political dynamite" and that his (the judge's) campaign "began and ended" with publication of the story.

Also Regrettable: "I also find it is regrettable that this has become an issue for home rule. I don't believe either form (present and home rule form) of government would have made the situation any different. It is not a result of one hand not knowing what the other is doing," Walsh said.

Walsh was possibly referring to a statement by Arthur M. Savard, Republican candidate seeking the nomination for Jackson county sheriff. Savard publicly stated he had changed his mind in favor of home rule and stated "the charter is a definite improvement over our present system with its lack of fixed responsibility and inadequate coordination of the various departments."

Walsh was also referring to a statement made by the home rule committee that "there is no clear delineation of responsibility and authority."

Not Under Home Rule: County Judge Miller and County Commissioner Chester Wendt declared last week, in answer to a citizen's questions, that the tax situation "would not have been likely to occur under the home rule system."

The sheriff also disputed the home rule committee's statement that "it has been estimated as much as $100,000 of the long-unpaid personal property taxes will now be uncollectable due to property owners dying or moving away, and to property declining in value or being sold."

This would be an impossible guess to make anywhere near accuracy, Walsh said.

Notified County Court: "One of the first things I did upon assuming office was to notify the county court of the large amount of delinquent personal property taxes," Walsh said. "Later they (the budget committee) gave me a deputy specifically to collect delinquent personal property taxes. He collected some $130,000 in taxes in one year which was much better than the $30,000 to $35,000 we had hoped for."

"Later, due to pressure of business, we had to shift the tax deputy to the civil department part-time, but not to the criminal division as stated. Even then he collected some $90,000 in personal property taxes in a year."

Asked if the sheriff's office would follow-up the tax publication, Walsh replied, "This is one of the basic misunderstandings on tax procedures."

Taxes Become Judgment: "The publication of the delinquent taxes automatically makes them a lien against the delinquent taxpayer's real property (such as house and land) after they have been published four times. Such taxes become a judgment against the real property when entered in the judgment record by the county clerk as required by law."

"This makes for a more secure debt from the tax collection standpoint," Walsh said.

"The amount of personal property taxes delinquent is no more staggering now than it was five or 10 years ago," the sheriff said. "This procedure (of advertising) is far less expensive than making personal collections through a deputy."

Gives Illustration: "The latter item can be compared to a mail man attempting to deliver bills only to the person to whom they are addressed when that person is well aware they are bills and reluctant to receive them," Walsh illustrated.

"Personal property is removable, expandable and useable. Real property is different. You can't run off with it and it can never be completely destroyed," the sheriff explained.

Walsh said further his office has always filed a claim when notified of a pending bankruptcy action. He has attended "virtually every hearing," he said. Like anyone else the county takes what is left of the assets depending on the referee's decision in the federal court over which the county has no jurisdiction.

Has Done Well: The Jackson county tax department has done well with the limited personnel available for collections, Walsh added. This county has just half of the tax collection personnel of comparable counties like Douglas county. Jackson county has four women clerks and one part-time deputy.

Walsh said he also feels the county court and budget committee have done well by him since it had honored his request for an additional deputy to collect taxes.

Walsh is appearing before the budget committee today to again ask for an extra deputy to collect personal property taxes, according to the budget committee schedule and the budget submitted.

Pulitzer Winner Is Congratulated

Santa Barbara, Calif. (UPI)—Thomas M. Storke, editor and publisher of the Santa Barbara News-Press, today received commendation from Gov. Edmund G. Brown for winning the 1962 Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing.

In a telegram to Storke, Brown said: "Congratulations on winning the Pulitzer Prize. Your exposure of the John Birch Society merits the deepest respect of all Americans."

"I join with all fair thinking Americans in commending you on your courage and enterprise."

Storke was awarded the $1,000 prize Monday "for his forceful editorials calling public attention to the activities of a semisecret organization known as the John Birch Society."

He said in commenting on the award: "I am highly gratified to be awarded one of the highest honors in journalism. What I and the News-Press did is only what any good newspaper would have done under the same circumstances."
