The Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a woman's editor. Each article is a summary of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Eric F. — She should help him accept being short.
Rose H. — It worries him and I try to keep off the subject.
Eric F. — My sister has an 8-year-old son who looks like 5, so far as his height goes. Otherwise he's more like a 10-year-old — wonderful company, bright, wiry and athletic. I have wonderful times with him, bike-riding, ice-skating, swimming. Since my own children are daughters, and still under 4, I spend much of my free time with Ernie.
But last week I had a disturbing experience. His mother asked me to take him shopping for a suit. She told me to pretend I was getting him a Size 9, even though he takes a 6. This became awkward because Ernie heard the salesgirl say, "Here's a 6!" I looked at her and mumbled something about it being marked wrong. We wound up with a 7, but Ernie thinks it's 9. I want my sister to be honest with him.
Rose H. — I'm worried enough about Ernie's short stature and I don't want him to worry about it any more than necessary. I have hopes that our doctor will do something about it if Nature doesn't bring Ernie up to average in a year or so.

Meanwhile, I see nothing wrong in using a few ruses to make him feel more like the other kids in his class. If he's 8 he should take Size 8 or 9, he thinks. Usually I shop without having him along and remove the labels. But once when he accompanied me and heard me ask for a 6, he began to cry. "I'm 8, not 6," he sobbed, as though I was getting him baby clothes.
I even transferred him from a play group, where he was the shortest, to one with younger boys where he's one of the tallest.

The Council: That word "average" can be a cruel one and, humanly speaking, there's no such thing. No individual is really average. He's himself and, as such, someone special! So Mrs. H. would do better to prepare Ernie to grow to be himself, rather than to be average. And if that self is destined to be on the dwarfish side, it can still be a happy, useful and most precious self. No subterfuges, and certainly no apologies, are necessary.
While the subject of Ernie's stature needn't be harped on, neither ought it be sidestepped as awkwardly as Mrs. H. has been doing. Out shopping, tell him we're buying this size because this is the size that fits. Never mind what it's called. If it's 6 and you're 8, so what? You're reading "Size 8" books, aren't you? You're keeping up with Size-8 accomplishments, even Size-10, according to Uncle Eric.

As to the play group, Mrs. H. may be right. In gymnastics, physical matching makes the contests and formations more balanced. But once Ernie can be realistic about being short, he should have his choice — stay with the young kids for the sake of good races and bouts? Or more into his age group and find niches where his brain, as well as nimbleness, make up for his limited reach?
We don't know the family graph of hereditary height patterns, so we can't predict whether Ernie will say short, or whether he may undergo a growth spurt during adolescence. Whatever hope the doctor held out to Mrs. H. was probably based upon his acquaintance with other members of the family. This we know: The doctor can tell Mrs. H. when growth has ceased by observing the ossification of the ends of the long bones. In some people, this is not complete until their 20th year.

Meanwhile, short people continue to be "giants" among us in vital fields. Mrs. H. might quote Victor Hugo to Ernie: "There is no such thing as a little country. The greatness of a people is no more determined by their number, than the greatness of a man is determined by his height."
