Association For Business Schools

The formation of a new national association of private business schools has been announced in Washington, D. C. United Business Schools association, with more than 500 members throughout the United States and Canada, with enrollments of 150,000 men and women, is the result of the unification of two former national groups.

Robertson School of Business, Medford, is a member school of the UBASA. "Great demands are being placed on private schools to carry their share of the load in solving the problem of high school dropouts, to provide training for the unemployed under the new job retraining bill, to secure more and more qualified people for office jobs, and to provide more and more training for the hundreds of thousands of young people coming along that either cannot or do not want to go to college but need skills by which they can earn a living," Weldon L. Strawn, association president, pointed out.

He further stated that the board of directors felt that if the private business schools were to do their part in solving these problems it was imperative that the field have one strong association which could spend its time constructively working towards solutions without having part of its energies and resources spent in competition with a rival association.

Fireball Frightens Baseball Players

By United Press International A frisky fireball that threw a curve at Pacific Coast league baseball players wandered across the Pacific Northwest sky Monday night and was viewed by hundreds.

At Vancouver, B.C., players for the Vancouver Mounties and the Vancouver Beavers scurried for the dugouts when it seemed the fireball might hit the ball park.

Residents of Bellingham also reported seeing the object, believed to be a meteor. Reports also came in from Wenatchee, Lake Chelan, Rock Island and the Tri-Cities area of Washington.

Witnesses said it was very brilliant and had a trailing streamer. Nobody seemed to know just what happened to the fireball and no reports were made on whether it came to earth or burned up in the atmosphere.

Columbia River Near Flood Stage

Portland - (UPI) - The Weather Bureau said today the Columbia river's annual spring rise is under way and the river is expected to reach flood stage at Vancouver, Wash., by Friday.

The river rose about four feet last week end. The bureau said the week end rise was due to dumping in the river of water from some streams of the upper Columbia reservoirs where it had been held for several weeks.

The rise caused logs and driftwood along the beaches to float free, damaging several boats. The river is expected to reach 18.1 feet at Vancouver Friday. Low-lying farm lands are expected to be flooded.

Salt Poisoning Ruled Accidental

Binghamton, N.Y. - (UPI) - The salt poisoning deaths of six babies at Binghamton General hospital in March have been ruled accidental and there will be no prosecution, Broome County District Attorney Stephen Smyk said Monday night.

Smyk announced there would be "no criminal prosecution" shortly after he received word of a verdict of accidental death in each case by Dr. Vincent Maddi, Broome county coroner.

Both Smyk and Maddi said a joint investigation, along with an investigation by local police and hospital officials, had not produced sufficient evidence to warrant criminal action.

The six babies died after salt mistakenly had been substituted for sugar in the milk formulas.

Hospital officials said however, it had not been decided yet whether to reinstate nurse Lillie May Colvin. Mrs. Colvin, who was in charge of the formula room, was suspended following the deaths.

Committee Votes On Fuel Taxes

Salem - (UPI) - The Legislative Interim Highway Committee Monday passed a resolution against removal from the State Constitution of the provision that earmarks fuel and other taxes for highway purposes only.

The vote was 4-1, with State Sen. Melvin Goode (R-Albany), voting no. He said the provision could just as well be in the statutes, instead of the constitution.

The Oregon constitutional Revision commission has already voted to remove the highway ear-marking section from a proposed new Oregon Constitution. But the interim committee said it understands this action will be reconsidered by the revision commission.

A legislator said he understands that the reason the commission may take another look at the proposal for deletion is a statement by a New York banker that such action would adversely affect interest rates on state highway bonds - meaning the state would have to pay more interest than it pays now.

The banker made this report some weeks ago to State Treasurer Howard C. Belton, after the banker heard of the action by the revision commission.
