Pickin' Pears

By SID HOLLINGSWORTH
The Rev. John S. Power, Episcopal minister at Shady Cove and Prospect, is now able to visit the domiciliary once a week.

Mr. Power is helping in an important job, namely that of finding jobs or recommending interested members for outside employment. He has already helped to place one man, William Allen, who was in charge of the hobby shop. Allen is now working with the forest service at the Prospect Ranger station, where he is an administrative assistant. He is on furlough while making this effort to get located.

The VA policy in this respect, as explained by officials, is that it is unable to place men in jobs other than those made available at the station.

If a man has a prospect of employment away from the domiciliary, and is qualified in spite of his disability, a reference may be forthcoming. For a number of years, the domiciliary has supported the movement both locally and nationally to "hire the handicapped."

Outside work will be resumed during the summer months and it is planned to use extra men from the membership to do this work.

Now that school is out, there will be another angle of employment to consider during the summer months. This is the business of finding work that students can do. The following statement comes from the VA information service concerning this outlook:

"About 600 students were summer employees at VA hospitals and clinics last year. Some of the areas in which students were employed were laboratory work, occupational therapy, physical therapy, corrective therapy, manual arts training, dietetics and social work."

A limited use only can be made of such students at White City, according to the management.

The VA is primarily interested in cultivating the interest of college students whose subjects qualify them to fill technical positions in such fields as those outlined above.

Students from Southern Oregon college have been given a first hand opportunity to consider employment in the federal government and the Veterans administration by quarterly visits of the VA Domiciliary's personnel officer.

Only one student has been authorized for summer work at this installation. He is Joseph Little, and he will enter the social work service under Mr. Kelley. He is attending the University of Utah.

Jack Stewart, personnel officer, said this is the first time the domiciliary here has employed a student for summer work. "We would like to employ more but only one position has been authorized at the present time," he said.

The sun and the bracing air from the hills gave to the Memorial Day ceremony at the VA cemetery near Eagle Point the kind of setting that added meaning to the stirring address of Dr. George G. Roseberry, of the First Methodist church, Medford, with the blessing of living in the world after the holocaust of world war, culminating in nuclear destruction.

The spiritual theme was amplified by Domiciliary Chaplains Eskay and Frazee in their opening and closing prayers, with one minute of silent prayer following the laying of the memorial wreath by Acting Director Banks I. Paul.

Dr. E. G. Everett, chief medical officer, was chairman and master of ceremonies throughout. The accordion group directed by Caesar Muzzioli, with music, and the performance of the member detail as the firing squad, gave the event the needed martial tone. Eagle Point Cub Scouts, Pack 48, decorated the graves and representatives of volunteer organizations were on hand to participate as distinguished guests.

Retail Outlet for Senior Craftsmen Set for Ashland

A trial project to provide a Craftsmen of Oregon in the Ashland Art Gallery and Workshop this summer has been announced.

The project will be a joint effort of the Senior Craftsmen of Oregon, the Rogue Valley Council on Aging, and Robert Onstad of the Ashland gallery. The gallery is located at 31 Waters st., Ashland.

Omar Bacon, president of the council, and the executive board, met recently with Miss Elizabeth Baldwin, Portland, who represented the Senior Craftsmen, and Onstad. Onstad has offered the use of his gallery for the two-month experiment.

Miss Baldwin explained that the Senior Craftsmen of Oregon Inc., a non-profit organization, has more than 450 members who have joined in a cooperative to sell their handcrafted articles. Members who create and sell articles must be at least 50 years of age. All articles accepted by Senior Craftsmen must be approved by a committee of craftsmen as to design, quality, and salability.

The high standard or originality and good workmanship, Miss Baldwin stressed, has made the Senior Craftsmen known throughout the United States.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare included the program as one of 10 "guide posts for effective community action" for the White House Conference on Aging and has published its story in a new series "Patterns for Progress in Aging."

Interest in this area developed in having an outlet in the Rogue valley when Mrs.

Clifford Zollinger, Portland, also a charter member of the Senior Craftsmen, showed a film on the project to the council here in April.

The council's board agreed that to bring the opportunity to southern Oregon craftsmen this summer, they would sponsor the trial project through promotion of public interest, would appoint a jury of qualified experts in all crafts to advise potential craftsmen, maintain the standards of the Senior Craftsmen, and cooperate with Onstad.

Onstad will handle all financial arrangements between the craftsmen and the Senior Craftsmen of Oregon Inc., which will consign articles for sale directly to him.

Miss Baldwin is a former director of standards in the state welfare office of Oregon and was chairman of the regional conferences on aging held throughout Oregon. She will serve as liaison between the Senior Craftsmen Inc. and the local council, according to Bacon.

Mrs. Everett Lasher, Medford, retiring president of the Rogue Valley Handweavers Guild and a trained occupational therapist, and Onstad, a former teacher in the arts and crafts department of the Ashland public schools, have agreed to act on the design committee jury. Other members will be selected later, Bacon said.

Interested local craftsmen may obtain additional information from Onstad or the Senior Activity Center, 601 East Jackson st., Medford.

Selma Youth Said In Fair Condition

Leonard Martin Tucker, 17, of Selma, was reported in fair condition by his Medford physician Saturday, suffering a broken jaw sustained when he was attacked by a Grants Pass youth Wednesday night. Tucker is in Rogue Valley hospital, to where he was transferred from the Josephine General hospital in Grants Pass.

According to Josephine county sheriff's deputies, the Tucker boy was attacked by a 15-year-old Grants Pass High school student at the Caveman Drive-in theater.

A suspect was arrested by sheriff's deputies after a complaint had been signed by Harry Radley Jr., of Regu, Calif., who was with Tucker at the time of the incident.

Deputies said the accused youngster was released to his parents. Deputies indicated he would be cited into juvenile court.
