Medford Secretary Proves Her Ability At Salem Meeting

Good secretaries are traditionally equal to nearly any challenge that is presented to them.

This truism was proven once again in Salem this week, where four city employees, Mrs. Jinx Rives, office manager of the city public works department, John Compagnoni, assistant city traffic engineer, Chief of Police Charles P. Champlin and Lt. Rollie Pean, department service officer, were attending a state motor vehicle conference.

Wednesday morning while the four were eating breakfast, Chief Champlin complained he had left his cuff links at home. He was scheduled to participate in a panel discussion later that morning.

Undaunted, Mrs. Rives excused herself, and returned a few moments later with a pair of big gold earrings, which she ingeniously contrived to serve as cuff links in Champlin's shirt.

An eye witness reported that while the earrings were a bit on the flashy side, they did manage to hold the chief's cuffs together during the panel discussion.

It was reported, too, that Champlin dazzled the audience with his off-the-cuff remarks during the session.
