Jurisdiction Over Road in Question

The Jackson county court plans to ask the forest service which government agency will have jurisdiction over the Mt. Ashland rd. to a proposed ski area.

The forest service has agreed to construct the road using $200,000 from O and C association funds. The state highway commission has agreed to keep snow cleared, and Jackson county has agreed to maintain it.

However, county officials are wondering which agency would be responsible for the road in case of a slide, or other such incidents.

The question arose when the forest service requested quit claim deeds from the county for land along the county's Colestine rd. The Colestine rd., located at the top of the Siskiyou, goes to the hill area to the west. The upper bend of the road would be realigned to form the entrance road to the proposed Mt. Ashland ski area, County Judge Earl Miller said.

'King' of Gypsies Blames Newcomers

Portland—The "King" of Portland's gypsies laid the blame for the city's trouble with his group on "newcomers" Friday.

Frank Ellis, who has been king for the past four years, said he wants to "roust them out."

"We don't want no more gypsies moving into town," he said. Ellis said he gets along with the police and discusses with them matters of mutual concern.

Earlier last week, Mayor Terry Schrunk said the police department was advised to "crack down" on gypsies who violate housing codes, and keep their children out of school. Schrunk expressed concern at the number of gypsies moving into Portland and becoming enrolled with county welfare agencies.
