Graham said the 35,000-seat McCormick Place Convention Hall will be unavailable after this week and he has been unable to locate another suitable site. Sunday a crowd of 37,000 heard the evangelist warn the United States that as a free nation "we may be finished."

Civil Defense Chief Says:

Millions Would Die in Nuclear Attack

Washington—(UPI)—The government has no hope of preventing "tens of millions" of deaths in blast areas in the event of an all-out nuclear attack.

What it wants to do, according to the nation's civil defense chief, is to have fallout shelters for people who are located where there is only fallout radiation. Nothing can be done for those close to the explosions, he said.

Assistant Defense Secretary Steuart L. Pittman, in charge of civil defense, said "There is probably no shelter construction that we know of that is practical and within reach," which would save people in the immediate area of a nuclear blast.

"We don't hope to save the lives of the millions of people who will be exposed to the direct effects of the explosions," Pittman said in a television interview ABC-Youth Wants to Know.

Although there would be tremendous loss of life in a nuclear attack, Pittman said, a "complete fallout shelter system would save from 40 million to 120 million persons from death by fallout."

He said intensive studies by the Defense department of probable prime targets for a nuclear attack had shown that "there is much less certainty than everyone tends to believe" that all large cities would be hit.

"I think that most people assume that New York and all the large cities would be hit," he said. "This is much less certain than is commonly supposed."

The government, he said, was placing "very little reliance on home shelters as a solution to the problem the country faces of providing a place for everyone to go" in the event of nuclear attack.

"We are depending on bringing into operation shelter space in large buildings, which will take care of large groups of people," he said. "This will answer the problem of most of the people in cities and towns who could not afford to build a home shelter. It will also be the preferred solution."
