Atomic Director Suggests Finding Cure for Cancer

By JOSEPH L. MYLER
United Press International
Washington - (UPI) - Dr. Alvin W. Weinberg doubts the wisdom of making manned flight into space the main event of what he calls the "Scientific Olympic Games" with Russia.

He believes most Americans would prefer their country to be the first to find a cure for cancer than the first to put a man on Mars.

Weinberg is director of the Atomic Energy Commission's Oak Ridge National Laboratory, Oak Ridge, Tenn. He discussed his views on space flight in an article on "Big Science" published by the University of Chicago.

He likened tax-supported big science to the big monuments of the past, such as the Pyramids of Egypt, which he said put a disastrous drain on the civilizations which produced them.

Divert Efforts
He asked whether it would not be wise to "divert a larger part of our effort toward scientific issues which bear more directly on human well-being than do such big-science spectacles as manned space travel and high-energy physics."

By 1970, Weinberg said, the United States will be spending about $400 million a year on the giant atom-smashers used in high-energy physics research. And the cost of the first American round-trip to the moon, he noted, has been estimated at anywhere from $20 billion to $40 billion.

Weinberg objected to making manned flight the Olympic main event on grounds of "hazard, expense, and relevance." He said space is "a much more hostile environment" from the standpoint of radiation "than we had suspected even five years ago."

And "just because a project is very big and very expensive does not," he said, "mean that the project will be very successful."

Take 10 Years
About 10 years ago, he said, an official study predicted it would take 10 years and $1 billion to produce a nuclear-powered aircraft. The 10 years have passed and the $1 billion has been spent, but there is no atom-powered airplane.

Weinberg said the United States is ahead of Russia in high-energy physics but that he does not feel even this is "the battleground of choice."

He said he would prefer scientific areas more closely related to man's every day environment. He said the "most spectacular" of these is "molecular biology" in which the United States is well in the lead.

Learned More
"We have learned more about the essential life processes—growth, protein synthesis, and reproduction—during the past decade than during all previous history," Weinberg said.

"In my opinion the probability of synthesizing living material from non-living before the end of the century is of the same order as the probability of a successful manned round trip to the planets."

"I suspect that most Americans would prefer to belong to the society which first gave the world a cure for cancer than to the society which puts the first astronaut on Mars."

Tiny Tot Classes Planned At YMCA
Registration for the Tiny Tots swimming class at the Medford YMCA will continue through June 15. The classes are designed for children from five to seven years old, and are divided into three ability levels. Each class lasts 45 minutes, and there are two instructors with the class at all times. There are 10 lessons in the course.

Instructor for the classes is Ben Jensen, physical director for the YMCA. Jensen has had five years experience working with children in this age group.

Further information may be obtained by calling the YMCA, 772-6295.

WINS TEST
Columbia, S.C. - (UPI) - Veteran Sen. Olin D. Johnston, 65, a "liberal" meeting the first real test of his political strength in 12 years, won a smashing victory over conservative Gov. Ernest (Fritz) Hollings Tuesday in the South Carolina Democratic primary.

SUBSTITUTE BILL
Washington - (UPI) - House Republicans Wednesday lined up behind a substitute bill that would set the ceiling of the national debt at $306 billion instead of the $308 billion asked by the administration.
