American Passenger Car Engines Will Not Get Any Larger

Detroit—American passenger car engines won't get any larger, racing officials said today.

Bill France, the top stock car racing promoter in this country, said a 428-cubic inch limit has been placed on all engines used in competition on his tracks.

The ruling officially was made by the six-member

NASCAR technical committee. It followed strong recommendations by Ford and other firms that some sort of limit be placed on engines to stop the race for ever bigger power plants.

Ford earlier this week repudiated a 1957 auto industry resolution banning participation in racing events and the stressing of speed and horsepower as a means of selling cars.

The NASCAR ruling, adopted unanimously Tuesday, will become effective Jan. 1, 1963. It will end the industry race for ever bigger engines in passenger cars.

The present powerplants are all within the new 428 inch limit. Pontiac has the largest engine at 427 inches, followed by Dodge at 413, Chevrolet at 409 and Ford at 406.

France said the new regulation would enable engineers to work toward improving present engines, instead of just making them bigger each year.

He also said the ruling would force the industry to improve body styles so they can get more speed out of the existing engines.

France also took time to commend Ford for his announcement Monday that the firm no longer would adhere to the industry rule against factory participation in racing.

"I think it's a good, honest move," he said. "The industry resolution was and always has been one which restricted development of safe automobiles."

Half Acre Fire Reported by State

Southwest district of the state forestry department reported a one-half acre fire yesterday on Sardine creek.

Patrolmen, who were summoned about 9:25 a.m. Wednesday indicated the fire was in grass and debris.

One pumper truck and crew were dispatched. A nother pumper was sent later to aid in mop-up work.

Russian Agriculture Standards Below Ours

Richmond, Va.—State Agriculture Commissioner Parke C. Brinkley, who returned Tuesday from a three-week inspection of Russian farming methods, said it was difficult to compare agricultural standards in the Soviet Union.

"I saw in the same field a team of oxen pulling the plows, while six rows over, I saw giant tractors doing the same job," he said. Soviet production standards "are well below ours," Brinkley asserted.
