Potential Athletes Need Physiological Material

Eugene - If a potential runner doesn't have the physiological material to make him a good athlete, no amount of training will turn him into an outstanding runner.

Dr. Pitcairn, associate professor of medicine and head of the division of chest diseases at the University of Oregon Medical school, spoke on the physiology of running.

He said the individual may be able to improve with training, but without the basic material no amount of training will help.

Some of the advantages of the trained athlete over other men were named by Dr. Pitcairn: he has greater capacity to increase heart output than the nonconditioned person, increases his muscle blood flow to 40 times above normal, and achieves a higher heat oxygen consumption.

Dr. Pitcairn commented on warm-up exercises and the effect of pure oxygen on an athlete's recovery period.

North Carolinians Visiting in State

Portland - (UPI) - A group of 166 North Carolina businessmen, farmers and educators arrived here last Monday for a visit to Oregon before heading for the Seattle World's Fair.

They were met by city and state officials, Rose Festival Queen Cherie Lynne Viggers and her court and the Portland Rosarians.

The visiting delegation is headed by John T. Caldwell, chancellor at North Carolina State university, and Carlisle A. Bethel, vice chairman of the Wachovia Bank and Trust company.

They were entertained at a social hour and dinner Monday night and planned to visit fruit and vegetable farms today before going to Oregon State university in Corvallis.

On Wednesday they will tour the Hood River apple and pear growing area before visiting Mt. Hood and the Dalles dam and going on to Yakima, Wash.

Juvenile Experts To Speak During Summer Institute

Eugene - Several nationally-known experts on the problems of juvenile delinquency will speak at the fifth annual Juvenile Court Summer institute at the University of Oregon Aug. 20 to 24.

They include W. T. Adams, project co-ordinator, juvenile delinquency project, Western Interstate Commission on Higher Education; David J. Bordua, assistant professor of sociology, University of Michigan, and author of Sociological theories and the implications for juvenile delinquency; and A. L. Frost, director, Metropolitan Youth commission, Portland.

Rudy Sanfilippo, research supervisor, Youth Studies center, University of Southern California; Martin Warren, research analyst, California Youth authority; and Dr. Hyman Frankel, president's committee on juvenile delinquency and youth crimes.

This year, these individuals will remain on campus for longer periods of time than in the past.

The institute, sponsored jointly by the Oregon Juvenile Court Judges association and the University of Oregon, offers a variety of lectures and discussion groups with the primary aim of "furthering our mutual knowledge of the problems of delinquency".

Participants will include individuals from institutions in the Northwest, from law enforcement agencies, probation and juvenile departments, and other agencies such as schools and citizens' advisory groups.

Advance reservation deadline is June 30. Address inquiries to Juvenile Court Summer institute, Kenneth Polk, director, Department of Sociology, University of Oregon, Eugene.

'Seminar Reading' Now Offered at SOC

Ashland - "Seminar Reading in the School" is being offered during the 1962 summer session at Southern Oregon college July 16-27, according to Dr. Bill A. Sampson, director of summer sessions.

An opportunity will be given to explore individually, or in large and small groups, the many phases of reading instruction and curriculum planning as related to the area.

Research and thinking in individualized reading, grouping, ungraded primary, secondary school program, word identification, critical thinking, reading in content areas, and the role of speed in reading as well as other phases suggested by participants will be considered. Designated school curriculum designs will be able to work on the development of their programs.

The facilities of the college library and curriculum center, the audio-visual aids department, and opportunities for observation in the laboratory school will be made available.

Instructors for the workshop are Miss Florence Allen, associate professor of education, Southern Oregon college, and Mrs. Evelyn Barker, elementary supervisor, Laka county, Ore.

Church Votes to Sell Its Property Property of the Medford Congregational church will be sold, according to a decision of church members at a special meeting recently.

Voting members authorized the board of trustees to list the property with local realtors.

The four-acre property is bounded by Groveland ave., Woodlawn drive, Richmond ave., and Oakwood dr. It includes three buildings which have housed the church and its minister since 1953.

It is offered for sale in order that the church may complete the purchase and begin the development of a new building site on the corner of East Jackson st. and Berkeley Way.

Warren Weber, Portland, was selected as the church's architect. He will begin immediately to design the workshop and educational church buildings.

The Rev. Robert Tull, minister of the church, has purchased a home at 401 Ardmore ave., where the family will live.
