

Copco Division Supports U of O Damsite Studies

Eugene—Three excavation teams from the University of Oregon will be in the field this summer doing archaeological salvage work at damsites in various parts of the state, according to Dr. L. S. Cressman, head of the department of anthropology.

The work is being done under contractual agreements with public utilities and a federal agency in compliance with the regulation requiring the salvage of a reasonable sample of archaeological material from areas to be inundated by dams built under federal license.

A six-man team, under the direction of John Wells, graduate student in anthropology, left Eugene recently for the Salt Caves dam area on the Klamath river just north of the California-Oregon border.

Copco Supported
This two-year project, now in its second year, is being supported by a $16,000 grant from the Copco division of the Pacific Power and Light company, Medford, which is constructing the dam. J. C. Boyle, vice president and general manager of the Copco division, is representing the utility company.

Wilbur A. Davis, who received his Ph.D. degree in anthropology from the university earlier this month, is heading a second team which went into the field last week. This group, also numbering six students, will work in the Round Butte dam area near Cove Palisades State park on the Deschutes river.

They are in the second year of a $17,064, two-year contract with Portland General Electric company, builders of the dam, represented by Waldemar Seton, vice president.

David L. Cole, curator of the University Museum of Natural History, will head the third team, numbering 11, which will leave June 25 for the John Day dam on the Columbia river. This is the fifth year of an approximately 10-year project, which will involve excavation along both sides of the Columbia for 75 miles from the John Day upstream to McNary dam.

They are currently working under an $11,500 grant from the National Park Service, which supervises archaeological salvage work on federally built dams.

Each team will be in the field for eight weeks. Dr. Cressman will make inspection trips to all excavation sites during the summer.

The salvage operations made necessary by the dam construction have dovetailed with the anthropology department's long-term systematic study of Oregon prehistory.

Dr. Cressman pointed out. The first part of this study was done in the high desert country of southeastern Oregon from which many of the inhabitants moved some 4,000 to 7,000 years ago when the country became arid.

The next step in this study was to find and follow the movements of these early peoples, working on the theory that they fanned out along the courses of the rivers toward the Columbia and the ocean, Dr. Cressman said.

Salvage archaeology along these rivers has bolstered this theory, although more excavation and more precise dating, particularly in the area along the Columbia river, is still needed, he observed.

Mrs. Neuberger Refused Mail List

Washington—UPI—Sen. Maurice B. Neuberger (D-Ore.) said Wednesday the Oregon State Medical society had refused to let her use its mailing list to poll state doctors on their views on medical care under the Social Security program.

Mrs. Neuberger said her office had made it clear that the society would be paid for use of its addressing service, which is open to drug advertisers and other commercial interests.

Lloyd Tupling, Mrs. Neuberger's administrative assistant, said a listing of Oregon doctors could be obtained from the state capital and be addressed here. But he said this would result in greater cost than use of the society's service.

Kansas City Zoo Maintains Birthday House for Children

Kansas City, Mo.—UPI—The Swope Park Zoo does a bustling birthday business.

Some 800 to 900 youngsters are expected to have birthday parties this year at the Birthday House, an octagonal building in a fairland setting. The structure was a gift to the city from the Hallmark foundation.

Birthday house, equipped with a lollipop tree and a full-time clown to amuse and supervise the children, was the scene of more than 330 birthday parties after its mid-summer opening last year.

Atmosphere Ranks With Food In Cafes

New York—UPI—It costs a restaurant operator approximately $4,000 per seat to open a new establishment, according to Donald Greenaway, executive vice president of the National Restaurant association.

Reason? Americans are becoming more interested in atmosphere than food.

TO LAUNCH ROCKET

Paris—UPI—France will use a three-stage rocket to launch its first satellite, the second European space symposium here was told Tuesday. Robert Chevalier, technical director of the Society for the Study of Ballistic Missiles, said the satellite rocket will be launched in three years.
