Tijuana Provides An Escape Into Another World

By MYRAM BORDERS
 United Press International
 Tijuana, Mexico (UPI) — The southern terminus of U.S. 101 in California opens into a different world — that of Tijuana, Mexico.

Tijuana is a city of bright lights, gaudy colors, exotic food and drink, rich men, destitute men and sin in many guises. It is a place to escape reality.

The border city is located on the northern extremity of the Mexican peninsula state of Baja California (Lower California). Its economy is almost totally dependent on the United States.

A potpourri of people make up Tijuana's 150,000 population. They are friendly, but not the gay people of mainland Mexico. Tijuana is somber and serious — intent upon existing.

A tourist must dodge careening taxicabs, sidestepping shoe shine boys and cope with dirty-faced children selling American chewing gum. Couples are stopped on every block with offers to arrange a marriage — or divorce, whichever is most appropriate. Quien Cuidados! Children offer to wash cars with a dirty cloth for a quarter or watch it all day for another.

Enchiladas and tacos are sold on most corners by foot cart vendors. And, in lush mirrored dining rooms, visitors can partake of quail under glass.

Tourists may enjoy the thrill of a taxi ride — down the wrong side of the road — to the race track. On Sunday, thousands throng to the bullfights.

The main attraction may not be in the ring but in the stands where shapely women wear pants a little too tight and each hat is a little bigger and more brightly festooned than the last.

After shouts of "bravo el toro... ole!" fade and the sun goes down tourists may attend the dog races or the fastest game in the world — Jai Alai — where spectators bet on the man rather than the horse.

Night clubs line the main street, each proclaiming in gaudy lights their girls are the most beautiful and their shows the most daring. Each has boisterous crowds, dim lights, drinks served around the clock and virtually unclad dancers.

Tijuana is a land of haves and have-nots; a place where anything can happen and does; a city where sin is sold unashamedly.

Setting Up Plants Proves To Be Varied Kind Of Occupation

Baltimore, Md. (UPI) — Anybody who thinks his job is tough should consider that of a man responsible for setting up a new chemical plant.

Robert N. Stapleton, training director of Union Carbide Chemicals Co., told a recent meeting of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers that his duties in starting a new company plant at Torrance, Calif., included: "juggler of schedules, builder of blackboards, consultant, purchasing agent, janitor and laborer, working 12 to 16 hours a day — and nights or midnights."

Research Conducted On Severe Headaches

Washington (UPI) — A migraine headache research project is supported by the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness.

Investigators are withdrawing fluid from tender areas in scalp tissue during headache. This fluid is undergoing test tube and animal research which seeks a reason for the painful tenderness of migraine.

Bostonian Known For Pungent Quotations

New York (UPI) — Joseph Lee, a Bostonian known as the godfather of play, is best remembered for his pungent quotations, the National Recreation association reports.
