Collagen Diseases

Many people are writing me to say that their physicians tell them they have a collagen disease, and that the physicians don't know much about it and do not know how to cure it. So now, the patient wants me to tell him what collagen is; what has gone wrong with it in his body; and what can be done to cure him. Some writers ask for a book or a booklet on the subject, or they ask where they can learn something about collagen.

I would suggest that those persons who can understand something of chemistry go to the library and look in the Scientific American for May, 1961. There they will find a splendid article by Dr. Jerome Gross. He tells what is known about the chemistry and the microscopic structure of collagen but, as he says, as yet this knowledge does not help doctors to work a cure, in the case of a disease, such as rheumatoid arthritis, scleroderma, dermatomyositis or lupus erythematosus.

As Professor Gross says, collagen is perhaps the most abundant protein (main component of meats) in the animal kingdom. It is the major fibrous constituent of skin, tendons, ligaments (such as hold bones together in joints), cartilage (gristle), and bone. It has several properties. In a tendon (as just above the heel) it has the tensile strength of steel wire; in the cornea (clear window of the eye), it is perfectly transparent; in the hide of an animal, it is "tough as leather" and it can be made into glue or gelatin.

It is poorly developed in a child, it can cause serious and crippling deformities; and it has something to do with rheumatic diseases, and diseases of the arteries, the heart, the kidneys, the muscles and the skin.

Appears as Fibrils

Collagen appears under the electron microscope as fibrils (extremely minute threads of tissue), the structure and intermeshing of which have much to do with the underlying strength of the many tissues of the body. Interestingly, in bone, the fibrils are arranged much as an engineer would arrange struts and girders in a bridge.

The collagen is built up and put together mainly in cells called fibroblasts. Its chemical structure is such as to give it great strength and toughness and stability. The molecules are arranged in coiled chains which give great tensile strength.

Chemists have now found that they can dissolve some collagens in an acid, or in a solution of table salt, and then they can get the substance out again in any one of three or four forms. The long collagen fibers can arrange themselves in several groupings.

Collagen varies much in its chemical properties, depending on its age. The studies being made of collagen are throwing light on how the body assembles its many structures from simple, chemical building blocks.

These studies may throw light on how the body is constantly remodeling its tissues—tearing out old parts, and building in new ones, much as an architect remodels an old house for a new owner. It may well be that collagen diseases result from a failure of this rebuilding process to take place normally.

Can't Diagnose By Mail

As Professor Gross says, it may be some time before these discoveries in regard to the chemistry and structure of collagen disease, that physicians can logically start doing something to help patients. In the meantime, I hope no one writes to Dr. Gross asking him to send a prescription. He is a busy man and should not be bothered with a flood of letters. I know I will now get many letters asking me for the professor's address, also asking me how to treat a collagen disease. I cannot, and must not, try to diagnose and treat diseases by mail, much as I would like to help the suffering people.

It distresses me not to be able to answer thousands of requests for help, but there just are not enough hours in the day, and in hundreds of cases, I cannot guess what is wrong. Because of these difficulties, I have written a series of booklets that can help many of my readers to get some understanding of their illness. A list of these booklets will be sent to you if you will include a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request. Address: Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Dept. MMT, The Register and Tribune Syndicate, Box 957, Des Moines 4, Iowa.
