

HOLD THE FORT!—The 11 children of Louis Crosswhite are firmly entrenched in the family station wagon at Hydesville, Calif., after deputies had arrested the 50-year-old laborer for obstructing the law. Deputies from Eureka attempted to repossess the car with a tow truck. Crosswhite told the children to get into the auto, lock the doors and let no one in. While the sheriff's men think over their strategy, the children live in the car in shifts while their father sits in jail. (UPI)

Cities Starting To Suffer 'Hardening Of Their Arterials'

"Any American city over 25 years of age is already starting to suffer from hardening of its arterials and thrombosis of its parking spaces."

This observation was voiced by Mayor John Snider in a luncheon address before the Medford Rotary club this week.

Snider, who is now serving his third term as mayor of Medford, told Rotarians that "unfortunately there isn't a vaccine on sugar cubes to feed to an ailing city. Neither is there a single tonic to make a drooping city perk up and act like the teeming youngster it used to be."

Speaking at the Rogue Valley Country club, Mayor Snider recalled that 20 years ago Medford sustained the shock of thousands of soldiers at Camp White, followed by the shock of losing the same thousands of soldiers who had caused citizens here everything from inconveniences to riches.

Downtown Problems
Snider said that across the country city governments are paying special attention to downtown problems because of the tax burden sustained by these areas and the fact that the central business district of a community has become a symbol of the city.

Mayor Snider reviewed the findings of Richard B. Hayward, well known planning consultant affiliated with the bureau of municipal research. Hayward, who conducted a survey of this city, envisions a functional distribution of land uses in the central business district, according to the speaker, with the core area compact, easily accessible and convenient for shoppers. The central business district pattern must be modified from the present gridiron street plan with Medford's government center to the west adacent to the new Federal building and county courthouse.

Special attention must be given to off-street parking and the development of mall-type areas downtown for the convenience of shoppers.

Tools of Planning
We have available all the tools of planning and projecting but the real leadership must come from the merchants and property owners. Mayor Snider emphasized. Traffic patterns, zoning, off-street parking areas—all of these are cold and without meaning until we add to them the magic warmth of American merchandising, he said. Mayor Snider is past president and member of the board of the League of Oregon Cities, chairman of the Oregon Sister Cities program and vice chairman of the State Board of Aeronautics. He was introduced by City Manager Robert Duff.

Many Countries Pushing Plans To Enlarge Sugar Mills

Washington (UPI)—The foreign Agricultural Service said Thursday many countries are going ahead with plans for building or enlarging sugar mills and refineries despite obvious surplus stocks and low prices of sugar in the world.

Such activity is going on in most major parts of the world, the agency said, but it is most in evidence in Asia and Africa. This expansion is going on in some countries, FAS said, because of the desire for self-sufficiency and the need to earn foreign exchange. It noted that these considerations "sometimes outweigh questions of cost and efficiency of production."

Limited Future
FAS said the continued drive toward self-sufficiency and the rapid increase in world production of sugar in recent years "imply a limited future for profitable exports of sugar."

The world has had no difficulty in recent years in producing more than enough sugar for a rising population and an increase in per capita consumption. So, as the export market shrinks in proportion to total production and consumption of sugar, it is likely that new construction and expansion of sugar mills will occur primarily to meet growing domestic requirements rather than to provide for expanded exports.

American wheat has been put to a new use in Pakistan—wages to pay labor cost of construction of a school.

School Needed
When Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman was in the village of Gangu Bahadur, Pakistan, last year, he was informed that a primary school was needed.

Freeman offered American wheat to pay the labor costs if the village would supply the necessary funds for building materials. The funds were collected through donations from villagers and a special grant from the Pakistan government.

The U.S. wheat will be released from Pakistan government storage to pay the labor costs of building the school that will accommodate 100 children. The laborers' wages will be paid one-half in cash and one-half in wheat. Half of the wheat released to the village authorities will be sold on the open market for cash. This will then be paid to the laborers on a weekly basis along with an equal amount of wheat.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a woman's editor. Each article is a summary of a family disagreement presented to the Council. The Council deals with problems, major and minor, encountered by guidance counselors and social workers. Edited by Mrs. Alma Denny. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Raymond U.—Why couldn't she have told me she was studying voice?

Lorna U.—He makes fun of me when I tell him my ideas.

Raymond U.—Lorna and I have been married 12 years and have two daughters. I'd like to know why she talks to me as though I'm a mental defective—just baby talk and nonsense, or else requests for money or help—but she saves all her important talk for her friends and her family. Even the children know more about how she spends her day and what she's plotting and planning than I do. And I'm her husband, her next-of-kin.

What brings me to this slow boil is meeting a neighbor on the bus and having him ask me how Lorna's music lessons are coming along. I did not even know she was taking any, but this guy's wife had told him. Well, I mumbled something to pretend I was up on things. But evidently she leads a private life right under my nose. I'd like an inside track, and right away, too.

Lorna U.—A woman can be laughed at just so much. What's a wife to do with her hopes and dreams and bright ideas if she knows all she can expect from her husband is ridicule?

From the beginning of our marriage I used to tell Ray all the things I'd like to do with my life—travel, study, create and work. He'd nod or grin or just grunt. But when the children were out of diapers and on their feet, I began to talk more seriously and earnestly. That's when he began to make fun of me. And it hurt terribly.

So when our younger

Ike To Address Republican Dinner

Washington (UPI)—Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower visits Washington today for a series of political conferences and a speech labeled as a "hard-hitting attack on New Frontier domestic policy."

Eisenhower planned to address about 3,000 Republicans tonight at a $100 a plate GOP fund-raising dinner. Former Sen. John W. Bricker of Ohio, chairman of the dinner, said the event was a sellout.

The net proceeds from the dinner will be divided, with 75 per cent going to the GOP Congressional Campaign Committee and the remaining 25 per cent to the Republican Senatorial Committee.

The former chief executive and his wife were scheduled to arrive in Washington this afternoon from their Gettysburg, Pa., farm.

daughter started kindergarten this winter, I signed up for voice lessons at the Community House. Some of my friends criticized me for being flighty and stage-struck. Others approved. I figured I'd tell Ray when I could invite him to a class concert.

The Council: How do you think bartenders got so popular, Ray? They listen (or pretend to) and they heave a deep sigh at the right time. And that's more than many husbands and wives do for each other.

When two people have joined their fates unto eternity, a rebuff tendered by one to the other takes on grave dimensions unless there's a healthy flow of communication between them which neutralizes it. Lorna says Ray's mockery hurt terribly. We'll bet it did. For she was exposing her inmost pain, her fragile aspirations. And from the eyes where she most sought sympathy and encouragement, she felt scorn and dismissal.

Here is a clear illustration of the special nature of the talk between a husband and wife. It's so different from the conversation each might have with anybody else. Disapproval by others can be shrugged off. A woman who's told, for example, that she looks like a tramp consoles herself by thinking, "That's your opinion. I can take it or leave it. Regardless of what you think, I still have my husband's okay." Lorna lacked that consolation. Not only did she despair of Raymond's staunch backing-up in the spirit of We-Two-Against-The-World. She felt he'd be the first to desert her, rather than the last, if at all.

Lorna is a lonely woman, Ray. Even though you're side-by-side with her every day, you're not giving her what every human being needs whether married or not—friendship. For that, for a patient ear and a non-judging heart, she must seek others. Perhaps it is too much to ask of a husband—to be breadwinner, mate, repairman, father, good citizen and all the rest. If so, two comments: you can try to become Lorna's confidant by being less caustic and frightening; and, if you continue to puncture all her "bubbles" you must expect her to continue bringing them to others for comment and review.

A husband's smile means more to a wife than the cheers of a multitude. Similarly, his frown can make her "tremble with fear" like Sweet Alice in "Ben Bolt." That's why others can blurt top-of-the-head opinions, but husbands must withhold judgment until dictated by top-of-the-heart impulses.
