Washington—This painting of a wounded American eagle by Sharon Whittaker, 17, Ravenna, O., won first prize in a contest held annually by the General Federation of Women's Clubs. It aroused consternation among the delegates to the federation's annual convention being held in Washington, and many said they did not understand why it should have won. Sharon explained that the eagle, symbol of America, is half-dead due to the worry and strife going on in the country because of conditions like crime, poverty and religious decay and the Communist influx. The people are wondering if they can pull the eagle out of its misery and make the country what it was meant to be—a free nation. Miss Whittaker explained. Looking at the painting is Mrs. Margaret Hoffmann, Washington, D. C. Third place in the contest which Miss Whittaker won was taken by Tom Semple, 17-year-old Medford student living at 828 South Holly street. His entry was an Oregon forest scene. (UPI)

Corums Return From Trip East; Sons Graduated

Mr. and Mrs. Grover Corum, 30 Willamette avenue, have returned to Medford after an extended automobile trip east. They went east to attend graduation ceremonies at Harvard university when their twin sons, James and Richard, received their bachelor degrees.

First Lady Has Mexicans In 'Palm of Her Hand'

By JAMES PLENN United Press International Mexico City—Mrs. Jackie Kennedy had Mexico City in the palm of her hand today even before she arrived. Socially, it seemed certain she would overshadow her husband as she did on their visit to Paris.

Even leftists protesting against the visit of President Kennedy took pains to stress they had nothing against the First Lady.

"Gringos no, Jackie si" said one sign in the city. Radio stations and night-club orchestras blared the strains of two new songs, "Lovely Jacqueline," a Mexican folk-type song, and "Jacqueline," described as a "slow rock 'n roll inspired by an Italian tune."

A third song about the visiting Jackie was being recorded and more were sure to come.

Chose Vivid Hues

Word spread well in advance among fashion-conscious Mexican women that Mrs. Kennedy's Oleg Cassini wardrobe would dazzle them. The American First Lady chose vivid hues as the Mexicans like them—yellow, flamingo pink, greens, blues and whites.

Daytime ensembles were mostly of silk, either sheath with matching coats or two-piece outfits.

For evening, the Kennedy trunks were packed with long gowns of silk, chiffon, and straw lace; in mauve, flame red and white embroidered with silver.

Mrs. Kennedy's hostess, Dona Eva Samano de Lopez Mateos, wife of Mexico's president, shares with her a love of literature and the arts. And her gowns were expected to reflect her Patrician features.

Travel Separately

As usual in state visits, the two wives will travel on their own missions while their husbands confer. Mrs. Kennedy will be taken Saturday by Mrs. Lopez Mateos to the National Archeological Museum. Pictures of the American First Lady abounded in publications. One magazine bought $125 worth of pictures of her from a photo service, not one of her husband.

Mexicans recalled that during the presidential tour of Paris in 1961, the crowds cheered so much for Mrs. Kennedy that the President wryly introduced himself at one point simply as her husband.

Highlight of the social side of the 48-hour visit will be a Foreign Office reception Saturday night for 2,000 people.
