Chinese Warned Against Cheating Communist State

By CHARLES R. SMITH
United Press International
Tokyo - (UPI) - Deep in the heart of China, where the pine trees grow tallest, Chao Hsien-hai is a champion wood chopper.

But it is his honesty that really brought him fame. Chao's glory spread across the Communist-controlled China mainland when the Kung-Hen Pao (Daily Worker) newspaper held him and his Szechwan province wood-chopping team up as an example for other workers in every field. It depicted Chao as a sort of combination Communist-style Paul Bunyan and Abraham Lincoln.

The newspaper is the organ of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. Its praise of Chao and his team came in an editorial warning workers to stop cheating the state and lying about production figures.

Translation
A translation of the editorial was received here recently. It was published several weeks ago only for eyes behind the Bamboo Curtain.

"Since we are all brothers," it warned the workers, "there can be no cheating among ourselves. Since we (the working class) are the masters of our country, we can never deceive the state."

The paper complained that there still was much of this going on throughout the country. "Remnant ideas of the exploiting class" was the way the paper described these practices.

It called for an "unwavering struggle" against them.

"The Chao Hsien-hai work team (has) firmly resisted the influence of such old ideas," the paper said. "When they found it impossible to fulfill the monthly plan, they did not accept the 'advice' to count the trees with branches and bark left on to make up the number of trees they were required to fell in a month."

"In their opinion, such an idea would corrode the comrades and constitute an act of cheating the state. From this we can see the Chao Hsien-hai work team's honest attitude toward the (Communist) party, the state and the people. This is the quality of the working class."

No Cheating
The paper complained there still were many workers to whom "mutual lying and cheating is nothing unusual." But this must be changed.

Chairman Mao (Communist party chairman Mao Tse-tung) has said that arduous work is like a heavy load laid before us, posing a test of our courage to carry it," the paper said. "We must act like the Chao Hsien-hai work team, willing to be 'fools' who do not mind 'suffering' but unwilling to be 'smart people' who shirk heavy work and take light jobs."

Chairman Mao has taught us, saying: "We should be honest in doing our work. Without an honest attitude, it will be impossible for us to accomplish anything in this world."

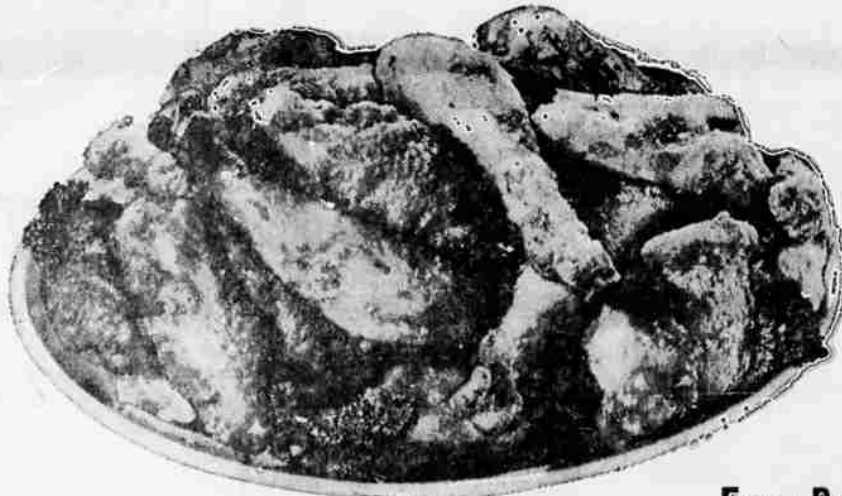

The paper quoted a Chinese proverb which said: "Men can cheat the earth for a while, but the earth can deceive men for a year." It added: "It can be seen that we cannot cheat in production and construction, nor in our struggle against nature."

The example of Chao and his work team should be followed, it repeated.
