Try and Stop Me

IN THE LAST PIECE that James Thurber wrote, the great humorist took a dim view of modern trends in his chosen field. "Comedy," he noted, "didn't die; it just went crazy. It has identified itself with the very tension and terror it once did so much to alleviate. The roost is ruled today by what has been called the comedy menace: horror jokes, magazines known as horror comics, and sick comedians. . . . Life at the moment is a tale told in an idiom, full of unsoundness and fury, signifying nothing."

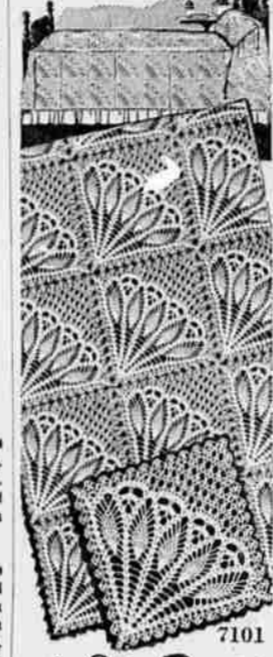

Wilfred Peterson compares in a few words a whole course in the gentle art of salesmanship: 1. Courteous words instead of sharp retorts. 2. Smiles instead of blank looks. 3. Warmth instead of coldness. 4. Attention instead of neglect. 5. Patience instead of irritation. 6. Remembering people instead of forgetting them. 7. Action instead of delay. 8. Appreciation instead of apathy.

Two elderly ladies wandered into Yankee Stadium just as Roger Maris unloaded a prodigious home run into the right-field stands. They sat watching the proceedings that followed in apathetic silence until a few innings later, Maris came up again and hit another homer to virtually the same spot as the first one. One of the ladies nodded at this point and said, "We can go now, Hilda. This is where we came in."

At a huge aircraft plant in San Diego the rest rooms are labeled "Pilots" and "Stewardesses."
