Move Over, Escoffier
 Dinner is ready! We're trying something new.
 Bouillabaise first, then Veal Cordon Bleu, Eggplant saute, truffles and rice, And finally a lovely, light Burgundy ice.

I hope you'll enjoy this, it's très, très gourmet, And making it has taken nearly all day. What, my dear son, what is that you just said? No! I won't go and fix you a hot dog instead. —Barbara Gardner

The ideal wife is the one who has steaks broiling when her husband comes home from a fishing weekend.—James Shurluck

A young man careened his car down a neighborhood street just as an elderly lady backed cautiously out of her driveway. Brakes screeched, and the two cars jolted to a stop only inches from each other.

The lady looked back and saw a pair of baby shoes dangling from the rear-view mirror of the young man's auto. "Wouldn't it be better if you drove with your shoes on?" she asked sweetly.

One thing that makes the summer air so pleasant is the number of television programs that leave it.—Dan Bennett

"Now you know why my rates are so much cheaper than the others!"

The woman who entered the greeting-card shop had a cold gleam in her eye. "Do you have anything suitable to send to my ex-husband's bride-to-be?" she demanded.

The clerk took one appraising look at the woman's expression and turned immediately to a rack of cards.

"Certainly," she said. "We carry a very nice selection of sympathy cards."

—Hal Chadwick

Gay Deceivers
 At buying bargain white elephants A rajah could scarcely top her— Yet, oh, how rarely a woman grants That she is a lousy shopper.

And yet, though her self-deceit's a whale, We certainly can't deprive her Of charity till we find some male Who'll own he's a lousy driver!
