Medical Care Bill Debate Continued On Floor of Senate

Washington - (AP) - The Senate opened another day of debate today on the controversial medical care bill, as the House continued its debate on the same.

More than a dozen amendments were pending, including several rival Republican proposals calling for federal payments to supplement private health insurance plans for the aged.

Backers of the administration-endorsed bipartisan compromise bill on Medicare are optimistic about its chances of Senate passage, but its ultimate fate is in doubt.

Small Chance Seen
The bill is considered to have only a small chance in the House, where it is bottled up in the ways and means committee.

Under terms of the compromise bill, medical care would be financed through Social Security payroll taxes. An estimated 18 million persons aged 65 would be covered, if it were passed.

Other congressional news:
Tax Cut: Sen. William Proxmire said today that the Senate House Economic committee should hold hearings to find out why the government is "slamming on the credit brakes." The Wisconsin Democrat said the Federal Reserve board's "restrictive money policies" are cutting business opportunities and increasing unemployment.

Nomination: The Senate Foreign Relations committee held hearings today on the nomination of Matthew McCloskey to be ambassador to Ireland. McCloskey, a former treasurer of the Democratic party, told the committee earlier that he knew of no conflict of interests in government contracts awarded to his construction firm while he was the chief fund raiser for the Democratic party.

Entertainment: The House Appropriations subcommittee today termed a government-sponsored tour of Southeast Asia by comedian Joey Adams an onstage success but an offstage flop. Testimony before the committee told of backstage feuding between Adams and his fellow show members. Chairman John J. Rooney (D-N.Y.) said that at one point Adams and band leader Buddy Rich engaged in a "near fist fight."

Alliance for Progress Finds Rough Sledding

New York - (AP) - At his most recent news conference President Kennedy said that one of the most urgent problems of the nation's overseas commitments today is the necessity for the Alliance for Progress to advance.

Businessmen here - many of whom play active roles in forwarding the objectives of the alliance - are quick to agree, but they also point out that there have been many factors which have acted separately or together to make the sledding tough to date.

Background Provided
The First National City Bank reviews some of these in a way which provides an up-to-date background to the concerns of administration officials over the alliance.

First of all it notes that its launching aroused strong hopes and expectations as a Marshall Plan for Latin America. The difference, however, is that the Marshall Plan was initiated to help restore an economy in Europe that already possessed all the ingredients for successful rehabilitation from the ravages of war except the ability to pay for greatly enlarged imports from the U.S.

20th Century Economy
"In contrast, the alliance aims to create a 20th Century economy on a continent in many parts of which the industrialization and the institutional prerequisites of a modern society are still absent."

The agenda for the alliance stressed social objectives along with economic growth and the bank in a letter said that "many knowledgeable people" wonder whether attainment of the welfare goals may not hinder rather than help the primary objective of increased output and income per person and thus bring neither social justice nor economic development.

Swimming Pool Said Important Item For Getting Into Washington Society

By HARRY FERGUSON
Washington - (AP) - The second best buy for anybody wanting to crash Washington society is a swimming pool, 16 by 36 feet and costing $4,200 which can be financed over 10 years. A regulation football costs only $17 but touch football, like oysters, is out of season here until Labor Day.

A pool is the quick, sure way to get into-if you will pardon the expression-the social swim. But better add the $4,200 about $100 for stringing lights above the pool. Whatever you do, don't make the mistake of going into your pool in the daytime wearing a bathing suit.

Contrary to prevalent opinion, not all persons attending dinner parties in evening clothes plunge into the pool. A small minority suffices to make the evening a success. That precedent was established on the night of June 16 when Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy gave a party at his Virginia estate. There were 300 guests but only three persons went into the pool, so you can consider one to 100 as a workable ratio.

Cigar and All

Mrs. Kennedy, a paragon of a hostess, not only went into the pool but immediately provided dry evening clothes for herself. Mrs. Spencer Davis and Presidential assistant Arthur Schlesinger, her collaborators in the high moment of the evening.

The nouveaux riches, the social climbers and the name droppers are doing their best.

Fred Meyer Plans Store in Vancouver

Portland - (AP) - The Fred Meyer chain has announced plans for a new shopping center in Vancouver, Wash. The $12 million center would be the 19th shopping center in the chain.

This would be the first move Fred Meyer has made into Washington since the end of World War II. The opening is set for late this fall.

Site of the new center will be in the Hazel Dell district. It is to include parking for 3,500 cars, rental spaces for other businesses.

Fred Meyer operated a large center in McLoughlin Heights near Vancouver but closed it at the end of the war.

to cash in on the swimming pool vogue. Any person who has anything larger than a bird bath in his back yard has a tall tale to tell in an attempt to curry favor with high society. One of them is that White House Press Secretary Pierre Salinger went into a pool the other evening, not only fully clothed but smoking a cigar. When he surfaced, the cigar was said to be still lit. Any experienced journalist knows this to be a subversive lie planted by a secret agent of Fidel Castro in an attempt to revive the Cuban cigar industry.

The safe rule is to look with jaundiced eye on all stories about people leaping into swimming pools unless they are authenticated by Miss Betty Beale, society columnist of the Washington Evening Star. Events have compelled her to become a specialist in nocturnal aquatic and she has such a finely developed ear that she can sit in her Washington home and hear a midnight splash in the far-away hills of Virginia. Miss Beale's latest case history involves the wedding of Miss Susan Bragdon and Lt. Tyler Field, United States Navy, and I quote:

"Guests repaired to the Joseph Bragdon home in McLean, Va., and there no sooner waved the bridal couple off on their going away trip than they jumped en masse into the pool. . . . So appealing was this submerged sartorial scene that instantly a whole flock of the younger guests ran and jumped in with them. It was kind of like a watery reception you might say."

"Happily four of the ushers were in Navy washable whites and the bridesmaids' dresses, luckily, were linen. But the boys in cutaways and striped trousers looked askance at their soggy finery, wondering how much they would shrink, while Papa Bragdon looked askance at the pool and was last seen dumping in quantities of chlorine."

It is of no consequence whether going into the pool is voluntary or involuntary. At Mrs. Kennedy's party it appears to have been involuntary. Some planks had been
