Technical Rehearsals Are Under Way at Festival

Ashland—All Oregon Shakespearean Festival rehearsals were closed to the public today. The annual closing measure is occasioned by the many involved adjustments which must be made before the season opens. The theater's 22nd repertory run gets under way Saturday, July 21, with the Feast of the Tribe of Will in Lithia park at 6 p.m., and the first showing of "Comedy of Errors" at 8:30 p.m.

Today marked the beginning of the complex four-day phase known as technical rehearsals when the four shows shift for the first time into their regular rotation order, with one show being worked each day.

The emphasis during the four-day period is on technical detail. Sound cues are set, lights are adjusted, musical timing is perfected, and all of the mechanical problems of scene changes and curtain manipulation are solved.

Several crew members and department heads are involved with the technical rehearsal phase. It is a slow process, with frequent stops, starts, and repeats. Communication between those responsible is much easier without spectators, hence the yearly house closure at this time.

On Friday, July 13, the first round of dress rehearsals begins on the Ashland stage. The four programs—"Comedy of Errors," "Henry IV, Part II," "As You Like It," and "Coriolanus"—will each have an afternoon run-through and a full evening dress rehearsal during the next four days. This round is also closed to all spectators.

On Tuesday, July 17, final dress rehearsals will begin. This four-day schedule is open to those holding festival memberships. Special guests from press, radio and television will also be invited to attend. Good seats for all performances may still be purchased.
