Small Worlds Around Us

By LYNN M. WATKINS

(Register and Tribune Syndicate 1962)

For One Playful Porpoise—Freedom Was at an End

It had been great fun running with the group, playing tag, speeding across miles of ocean carrying a fish in the mouth that another porpoise wanted, and still greater fun when possession of the fish changed and it was another's turn to give chase.

One day a boat approached the herd when the porpoises had finished feeding and were loafing on the surface or lazily chasing one another. The animals were more curious than frightened.

The decided to have fun with this wooden thing that made the funny noise and carried the same sort of upright beings they had seen before from a distance. They moved in closer.

Looked Normal

To the porpoise school, things appeared normal. They couldn't see the hurried preparations the men were making with a mechanical gadget on the deck. Neither were the animals unduly apprehensive when the innocent looking object, attached to a rope, was lifted into plain sight.

Then the motor speeded up and the boat began running in circles. This the porpoises liked; to them it meant the boat and the men wanted to play. This was a game they enjoyed.

They cast caution to the winds and entered into the spirit of the game. They swam in circles around the fast moving boat. They edged up until they were racing along with the bow-wave. They ducked down and swam under the boat, then leaped clear on the other side. They snorted, rolled and flipped their tails. This was great fun.

The man with the gadget saw his chance. There was a sharp, metallic snap. The aim was true. The tail fin of a speeding porpoise depressed a trigger and a powerful clamp snapped shut on the animal's tail-fluke.

Jarred To Stop

The animal turned and raced off at right angles to the boat, trailing the rope behind him. The grip on his tail held. He came to the end of the rope and was jarred to a sudden stop. He struggled powerfully, but the clamp on the tail was securely fixed.

The porpoise accepted the inevitable, knowing full well the futility of further struggle and gave up. Now ended the days of joyously racing across open oceans. Now a seemingly willing captive, he resigned himself to tank-life, making the best of a situation over which he had no control. He was protected, fed regularly and admired by thousands of curious humans, but sadly lacking the former "freedom of the seas."

Pro, Con Presented In Sales Tax Review

Eugene — Arguments for and against a sales tax were presented recently at the University of Oregon during a School Finance workshop concerning financing education.

The sales tax was reviewed by Robert Hall of Blyth and company, Portland, and Richard Eymann, chairman of the House tax committee of the last Legislature.

The income tax cannot be expanded without driving money out of Oregon, Hall said, and property taxes are now carrying 70 per cent of the burden paid by only one-fourth of the families. The sales tax would provide relatively stable state income, he noted.

Eymann pointed out that all taxes come from income, and that under the personal income tax everybody pays a fair share. The sales tax provides neither the principle of taxation for benefits received nor the principle of taxation according to ability to pay, he said.

The workshop began July 9 and will continue through July 18.
