Chicago—UPI—The Chicago White Sox have shipped baseball player Tim Lincecum back to the minors with a police escort. Policeman Cliff Wallace drove Tim to his home in Three Oaks, Mich., after the 11-year-old boy missed the Little League bus home from a week end outing at Comiskey park.

Congress Reported Making Progress on Recreation Front

Washington (CQ) — The Kennedy Administration and the 87th Congress appear to be making historic progress on at least one legislative front: recreation.

Spurred on by interior Secretary Stewart L. Udall, who is zealous about setting aside land for public recreation use, Congress is expected to complete action this year on three major recreation programs.

They are: Establishing a national wilderness system which will preserve the forest primeval for future generations of hikers and campers.

Creating a land conservation fund to "stake" Uncle Sam to buy up more land for conservation and recreation uses.

Setting up a program to make a continuing inventory of recreation needs and resources in this country and to make grants to the states to help them establish outdoor recreation areas and parks.

In addition, this Congress is expected to establish three new seashore parks within the National Park System before the end of this session. Cape Cod National Seashore Park in Massachusetts was established last year. Point Reyes in California and Padre Island in Texas are expected to become National Seashore Parks this year.

This would be a record number of new national parks created by any one Congress. Only three national parks have been created in the past 15 years. Everglades in Florida in 1947, Virgin Islands National Park in 1956 and Cape Cod in 1961.

The Wilderness Bill

The major battle centers, as usual, over the wilderness bill. The bill which passed the Senate last year is now in the process of being amended by the House Public Lands Subcommittee. Conservationists on the one hand and supporters of multiple uses of public lands have battled over this legislation for the past six years.

They are still at it. The bill that is finally enacted into law is not likely to satisfy either side. But at a minimum it will give statutory authority to the present wilderness areas which have been created by the secretary of agriculture within the national forest system. And there will be restrictions on building roads, buildings and commercial enterprises in such areas and on non-recreation uses in these areas.

As Udall sees it, unless America sets aside its wilderness areas and keeps them free from encroachment by commercial interests, the nation may end up with none. He told the White House Conference on Conservation May 24 that "the overriding need of men (is) for an environment that will renew the human spirit and sustain unborn generations." He said this "requires some sacrifice of short-term profits."

The various conservation groups, including the politically potent garden clubs, hold the same view.

Would Lock Millions

To Curtis M. Hutchins, chairman of the board of the St. Croix Paper company of Bangor, Maine, the wilderness bill would lock up millions of acres of resources in the wilderness areas forever, for the benefit of only "a few hardy hikers."

Testifying for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce before the House Public Lands subcommittee May 9, Hutchins asked: "Is it in the national interest rigidly to restrict access to such vast areas of scenic beauty so that only a very small percentage of our population will ever have the chance to use them?"

This view is shared by many present users of public lands including lumbermen, livestockmen, miners, oil and gas interests, water and power groups. They are skeptical of attempts to restrict multiple use of public land, as is done under the wilderness legislation.

The other recreation legislation is not so controversial. The administration on June 18 withdrew its proposal to tax recreation boats as a means of providing a major source of revenue for the land conservation fund. This action materially upgraded the chances for such a fund to be created by this Congress.

Theatre Association Slates Conference

Eugene — Some 700 members of the American Educational Theatre association from throughout the U.S. will gather at the University of Oregon next month to participate in a three-day conference.

The Aug. 20, 21, and 22 meetings will take place in Erb Memorial union on the campus.

This is the first time Eugene has been selected as the site of the annual conference of the association and its three sub-divisions, the American Secondary School Theatre association, American Children's Theatre association and American Community Theatre association. Last year the conference was held in New York City.

Horace W. Robinson, speech professor and past president of the AETA, is chairman of the committee handling local arrangements.
