

The opening of "The Stump" art gallery, 25 North Main street, Ashland, was held there Monday afternoon. The gallery will be open until Sept. 1, one day before the close of the Shakespearean festival. Seated on a stump at left is Mrs. Marilyn Briggs, operator of the gallery, whose paintings may be seen on the walls. With her are Mrs. Richard Doi, wife of Southern Oregon college art instructor, and Mrs. John Cotton. A display of books sponsored by the Tudor guild may be seen in the background.

Children's Play Is Scheduled

"The Emperor's New Clothes," a play especially designed for children, will open at the University of Oregon's carnival theatre July 24. The one and one-half hour long production will begin at 7:30 p.m. (PST). Three matinees will also be given, on August 1, 6 and 9 at 1:30 p.m. (PST).

Youngsters from 4 through 14 will especially enjoy this Hans Christian Andersen fairy tale, but adults will also find it entertaining. This is the only carnival theatre production at which children's tickets will be sold.

This version of the fairy tale was written by Madge Miller. It, as do all versions, extolls the virtue of truth. Although many songs have been added, "The Emperor's New Clothes" remains a play rather than a musical, according to its director, William R. McGraw, assistant professor of speech. Music was first added to the play by the Knickerbocker players in the Pittsburgh playhouse.

"The Emperor's New Clothes" is set in 17th century France. The emperor, a rather vain fellow, is determined to have the most elegant wardrobe in his kingdom, and sets about finding tailors whose work will please him. Two rogues design "the" raiment for the emperor, who praises his new clothes despite the fact that he can't see them.

Ely, Nev., July 15—This Nevada town—we guess the population at about 5,000, boasts of one of the largest "open pit" mines in the world. The ore is copper, and practically everywhere one looks from Highway 50 can be seen great mounds of the greenish earth. We asked the waitress who served our dinner if the mine is in operation, and she said that it is, except that it is down now for two weeks for summer vacation and repairs.

Ely is an interesting combination of the old and the new. A ghost town along the highway near the mine has an air of desolation, but in the new section the gaudy "club" lights, bright metal signs, droves of tourists and thick traffic gives the impression of typical Nevada activity.

Nevada itself has many contrasts. The vast mountain ranges—many of them bleak and forbidding, yet beautiful, and the seemingly endless flatlands in between—covered with sagebrush, give an impression of peace and emptiness. We thoroughly enjoy this part of Nevada. But the towns and cities we passed through today are anything but empty.

This tourist doesn't care about Reno. We don't gamble, and have only strolled through one or two of the so-called clubs out of curiosity. The hills surrounding Reno are dotted with trailers, shacks and mobile homes, giving the impression of being huddled together without rhyme or reason. They are very different from the well-planned, orderly and attractive mobile home centers around Medford.

We particularly dislike the huge, garish, horrible signs advertising the various casinos, night clubs and gambling places. One sign along the highway as we approached said: "Reno—Entertainment Unlimited." It probably is, too.

The old town of Austin intrigued the two of us. It too is a mining town, and the steep hills which enclose the buildings are pocked with mine shafts and holes and "tailings." The courthouse is dated 1866 and other buildings looked equally as old. The highway east out of Austin climbs very steeply—in fact, the poor little Doll had to do a lot of climbing today. To get from Reno to Ely the motorist has to drive up and down no less than eight mountain passes from 5500 to 7500 feet high. It makes for interesting motoring, because in between the road stretches straight as a string for 15 or 20 miles.

Of course, we had a fair share of up and down highway Saturday night over the Greensprings to Keno, but we didn't mind in the slightest. For one thing, we made the trip just as the daylight was fading and we saw more deer than on any trip before, and we've been over that stretch of road many times. They grazed peacefully beside the highway, or stood in the road and had to be driven off. The two of us counted 13 or 14 on the mountain road and then one was feeding by the side of the State Line highway, which crosses the water and marshlands en route to Tulelake. We hadn't thought that the deer would venture out in that area.

Mid-July this year isn't too late to see gorgeous wildflowers in California and Nevada. This morning, not too far out of Alturas, we came upon a glorious sight—acres and acres of yellow sunflowers. They grew so thickly along the highway that it was literally banded in gold, and the nearby fields were like yellow lakes.

We regretted that these must be left behind, but after rolling into Nevada, we began to see clumps of thistle poppies with their big white silk-petaled blossoms with yellow centers. They were thick in many places, and particularly so along the highway as it climbed over Carroll summit. We also saw many patches of the tall Prince's plume, with its pretty yellow blossoms. As the day went on, we saw blue lupine, both red and blue penstemon, some small yellow daisies and a few clumps of scarlet mallow.

Perhaps the cold spring and summer accounts for the profusion of flowers so late in the season. Puddles along the highway today indicated that Nevada had had a recent rather hard rain and today, with the Doll's top off, we ran through three brief showers. However, the rain was so light that it scarcely mattered. The morning was cloudless when we set out from Alturas, and since the day was pleasantly warm we could scarcely complain. However, the sky over Ely tonight is quite black and our waitress, questioned about the weather, shrugged and said, "It's been raining here. Who knows?"

While in theory we object to most highway signs—we'd much rather look at the scenery—some of them are diverting. One near Fallon read "Try Our Slotsipality." Another, advertising a gambling and dining place, read "Rags-to-Wine" and several signs advertising a hotel in Ely have amusing little burros painted on them.

We love vacations, but we hope others don't go through the tortures that Potpourri does in getting ready and actually on the road. We run around like mad making lists of what to take, washing, ironing, packing; at the newsroom we left countless messages and sets of instructions, most of which the news girls will probably find completely useless, and at the last moment we had to leave with a lot of tasks undone. We didn't find time to call Dian Staley and write a story about an interesting visitor from New York City; we also didn't find time to call and see if Merna Lemery is home from her trip to Europe. We're hoping Pal Pegy and FB and Sandy the Cub will find time with all their other chores to take care of all our little undone tasks.

Of course, we always worry and wonder if we turned off all the faucets and remembered to unhook the iron, etc., etc. But we aren't worrying about the garden, for we have among our friends one who actually offered to do the watering while Pappy and Potpourri are gone. This friend is Jeannette M., and she should have a gold star for her forehead. O.S.
