

'WEREWOLF' NABBED—Police spotted this "werewolf" ambling down a street in Hollywood, Calif., and followed him into the outer lobby of a theater where he startled passersby. The wolfman's growling sounds turned to words when he pulled the fangs from his mouth and told police he was Ross McGovern, 18. He explained his hobby was makeup and his actions were the result of a $1 bet with a friend. He was released by police after questioning. (UPI)

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is an summary of a family disagreement presented to the Council. The Council deals with problems, major and minor, encountered by guidance counselors and social workers. Edited by Mrs. Alma Denny. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Pamela K. — We'll tell Jay he's adopted just as soon as he can talk.

Lawrence G. — That's terrible. I was happy until my parents spoiled it.

Pamela K. — I don't know all the reasons but we've been advised by the agency through which we adopted our darling son that it's best to be completely honest with him about how he came to us. He's only 10 months old now and all he can understand is that we love him deeply. When he's old enough to enjoy a story we'll figure out how to let him know that we found our way to his side because he was meant to be ours. He'll know that the only difference between him and other children is that other parents had to accept what came, but we could choose exactly the child we wanted—our Jay.

Lawrence G. — Now that I'm old enough to look back, I think I'd rather have grown up believing I'd been born to my parents like other kids. But they followed the advice Pam got. They told me I had no past, only a present and a future which they would make as happy as possible. I was 10 years old when the full meaning of it all hit me. It was hard to feel so different. Other kids have relatives. I had adopted parents and my relatives weren't mine. They were my parents'.

Churchill Takes Champagne Toast
London—(UPI)—Ailing Sir Winston Churchill, 87, walked again today and toasted himself with champagne in recognition of another comeback against his enemies of time and illness.
