Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn W. Watkins

(Register & Tribune Syndicate, 1962)

Want a Good Look at The Peculiar Sawfish?

Looking down into the shallow, crystal clear water we could plainly see him swimming slowly, a long gray shadow.

We could almost count the numerous teeth that were stuck in a hit-or-miss pattern on the long snout. The sawfish that was moving under us was all of a dozen feet in length.

We recalled the wild stories we had heard from fishermen and wondered if this monster we were watching was getting ready to attack us.

No Tumult

But the gray shadow passed. No tumult in the water, no shattered boat-bottom, the sawfish was moving slowly away; he had no intention of attacking. We rowed carefully attempting to stay close enough behind to watch every move, but still at a safe distance. The big fish pushed ahead, forcing the long flat body over the sand bar. Once over the hump, in slightly deeper water, the sawfish came to rest.

What happened then changed our previous description of this particular fish. We had been saying "he," but we had made a reasonable mistake, for now we saw some tiny sawfish were being born. Perfect replicas of the old lady, the youngsters were sand colored, and each carried a tiny saw on its baby snout.

Caught Baby

We scooped up a frightened youngster in a dip-net. There was a fleshy sheath, like a soft scabbard over the saw, a wise provision of nature to protect the mother. This sheath drops away a few hours after birth and the little sawfish is in business.

The old lady lost all interest in the babies as soon as they were born. She struggled now to recross the bar and head for deeper water.

Strange, that in this day and age there should be such a peculiar creature in the sea, or that they should be so numerous; warm, tropical waters shelter great numbers of them. The sawfish is really a misfit. He has too much weight and too formidable a weapon.

Terrible Temper

He has been credited by those who profess to know him with a terrible temper, which with his peanut-sized brain is a dangerous combination for any creature.

The saw on the end of his snout is actually a flat blade of bone, as wide as six inches in a big fish, and armed along both sides with a couple of dozen pairs of sharp teeth. When hungry the fish is supposed to rush into a school of fish, slashing from right to left with the armed saw. The killed and crippled fish are later eaten.

Songfest Tradition Staging New Revival

New York — (UPI) — Before radio and television, a songfest around the piano was the favorite family pastime. The youngsters harmonized, dad played his mandolin or uke and mom usually accompanied them all on the piano.

The American Music conference reports the grand old custom is being revived. In many cases the new twist is that the whole family plays musical instruments along with mom and dad.
