-in his way. And Jeanne thinks Clark's life is a snap compared to hers, which is anchored in the home port by chores, child care and loneliness.

At present, home to Clark is somewhere to send his check and then, a place to flee. But since a home is more than a building with front and back lawns, his check is on the way to being marked "insufficient funds." Home is a relationship requiring more than dutiful hellos, good-byes, and letters. And in the guise of "ambitiousness," a young father like Clark may be burying himself in a frenzy of work to escape from home responsibilities he dreads. He figures, mistakenly of course, that increased dollar earnings will make up for shortchanging his family in the husband-and parenthood departments.

But Jeanne has made the situation worse than it need be by her sandstorm of self-pity. True, she's been through a lot. Possibly, in view of her age and child-bearing difficulties, she needs more household help and gobs of reassurance as to her attractiveness to her husband. The former can be provided by paid houseworkers if not by Clark; the latter must come only from him.

Where's her empathy toward Clark, however? Here's a guy, who competing with college men, feels he must run fast just to stay in one place. Insecure, he spends nerve-racking days figuring ways to go beyond the call of duty in order to impress his employers. Jeanne could at least help him do the figuring at home, by providing a peaceful retreat there at certain hours.

Here, though, is our big brainstorm for this pair: Beg, borrow, steal, or hire a baby-sitter. Take Jeanne along, Clark, on your next business trip. This will accomplish at least three big things, all good: Jeanne will see for herself what stiff competition you're up against. She'll have a therapeutic respite from child care. And you and she can enjoy a touch of the old togetherness.

The Family Council

Editors note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of a family disagreement presented to the Council. The Council deals with problems, major and minor, encountered by guidance counselors and social workers, edited by Mrs. Alma Denny. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Jeanne F.-He doesn't have to leave me alone as much as he does.

Clark F.-She doesn't have the least concept of what I'm up against.

Jeanne F.-I'm 39. Clark is 33 and we've been married seven years. After losing two infants during childbirth, we were able to have two more. They're fine, sturdy toddlers, now, a boy of 3 and a little girl of 18 months. Naturally I don't have an easy time of it, especially at my age. If ever a wife needed her husband around regularly I do right now.

But Clark lives only for his job. He eats it, drinks it, breathes it, dreams it, talks it exclusively. I can be flat on my back with both kids screaming for attention, but one phone call from his office and he's off to New York or Canada. The children barely know him. I tell him he's betting on the wrong horse. He'll regret neglecting us.

Clark F.-This comes of marrying a spoiled darling. Jeanne has never really been out in the world. She went directly from a sheltered life under her father's roof to a brief marriage with a rich playboy. This was annulled and she lived with her indulgent parents until her marriage to me. I was deceived as to her maturity, despite her being older than me. She sulks and pouts like a 4-year-old over things I can't control. A true helpmate would understand my side of our difficulties.

I gave up college to get an early start on a career with a wonderful corporation which rewards hard work quickly. Although I started as a salesman, I now manage the training department. This takes lots of thought. Since I can't get any work done at home, due to the kids' and Jeanne's fretting, I use the company offices wherever I happen to be.

The Council: Anyone with half an eye can see the trouble here. But Jeanne and Clark aren't opening that half. They're each too engrossed in their own little bills of complaint to recall that marriage means reaching out to lighten the load and brighten the road for someone else.

Clark thinks Jeanne should be content that he's en route toward a higher salary and she should put no roadblocks like companionship and help
