The C-5 has been previously erected in a vertical assembly building in the rear of the Complex 39 area. (UPI)

Holding Juveniles Responsible Said Part of Solution

Seattle, Wash. — (UPI) — The proper way to handle a juvenile delinquent is not to probe into his subconscious to find out why he broke the law but to tell him that he did wrong and warn him not to do it again, a psychiatrist said today.

Dr. William Glasser, a psychiatric consultant at California's Ventura School for Girls, said too often delinquents think because they are "emotionally disturbed" they are not responsible for their acts.

Best Attitude
 "This is not something they would be aware of on their own," he said. "They have learned that to get along well in a modern treatment institution this is the most comfortable attitude to take."

Dr. Glasser read a paper on his approach to delinquency to the National Institute on Crime and Delinquency which opened here today.

He said when dealing with inmates at the reform school, "I explained that it was true that they might be emotionally disturbed but it was because they had broken the law that they were locked up. A person can be emotionally disturbed and have a stomach ache or be afraid of high places but to get into the school, she had to break the law."

Most psychiatrists, Dr. Glasser said, try to "help the patient understand that conflicts buried in his unconscious are the cause of his aberrant behavior."

The traditional therapist does not question the assumption that once the child understands these previously unknown forces he will be able to think and act rationally.

However, Dr. Glasser contended, "the more delinquents are convinced that they are disturbed and have good reason to be so, the worse they will act."

On the other hand, he said,

"If everyone working with a delinquent child holds him responsible to himself for what he does, the child soon learns the pleasure of doing well and getting credit for it as well as taking a mature responsibility for what he does."

"He summed up his view, "We assume that if they (delinquents) can stop breaking the law, they will be less disturbed; not that once they become less disturbed they will then have less need to break the law."

Smelter Union, Kennecott Agree

Salt Lake City — (UPI) — Kennecott Copper Corp. and the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers have reached agreement on a new contract, federal mediators announced today.

The agreement came less than 15 minutes before a scheduled strike by the large union at Kennecott's operations in Utah, Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico.

Details and duration of the new work pact were not immediately announced.

Agreement came after an all-night bargaining session held under the auspices of federal mediators.

The strike would have involved 4,400 mine - mill members employed at Kennecott's Western Division.

Mine-mill's contract with the giant copper - producing firm expired June 30 and work had been continuing on a day to day basis up until last Wednesday when Mine-mill set its strike deadline.

Two weeks ago the United Steelworkers Union threatened a strike but a similar all night negotiating session produced a contract agreement.

Mine-mill's settlement was expected to closely pattern the contract signed by the steelworkers and Kennecott.

Education Board Meets in Ashland

Ashland — (UPI) — The Oregon Board of Higher Education met here today for a two-day session that includes another look at a proposed $45 million construction program for 1963-65.

The building committee, which already has given tentative approval to the program, continued to review it today.

The committee's agenda also called for an architect's report on campus plans for the University of Oregon, and consideration of a site for a physical education building at Portland State college.

The finance committee was slated to meet later.

A report from Chancellor R. E. Lileuallen was expected at a full board meeting Tuesday.

Impulse To Fly—Instinct To Stay Battled Within Her
 It was her first nest; the initial "settling of eggs."
 She hadn't given any of the events leading up to the construction of the nest the slightest thought; she was impelled by inherited patterns. She had to be taught to fly, but the nest-building had come naturally.
 Now there were eggs, four of them, pressed solidly against her underside. She knew she should turn them each day; knew there were times when she should return to the nest with her feathers wet to impart a certain moisture to them. She was conscious, too, of her mate; knew he was perched somewhere near, ready to give what assistance he could... even ready to pit his feeble strength against any enemy which might violate the sanctity of the nursery.

Perfect Fit
 She was comfortable. The sides and bottom of the nest fitted perfectly. She felt the reassuring pressure of it with her entire body. She slept.
 Then the dark clouds built up in the blackening sky. Came vivid flashes of lightning, followed almost instantly by heavy crashes of thunder. It jarred the ground, shook the nest and frightened the mother bird into instant wakefulness. The storm gathered momentum, and she was terrified. Two powerful forces within her battled for supremacy; one, the impulse to leap off into the darkness, to fly anywhere at all; the other, the instinct to remain with her eggs.
